RUSSIAN GOVERNMENT IN OMSK

Siberian Delegate Says It Does Not Depend Merely on the Army, But Is Really Representative

By C. A. KOVALSKY.

IN THE TIMES a few Sundays ago was printed an informative article by Louis D. Kornfield, entitled "Impressions of Kolchak and His Followers." In so far as this article registers the personal impression of a journalist who traveled by rail from Vladivostok to Omsk and back and talked with representatives of the various elements of the population, it is truthful and interesting. To the extent, however, that this article is not the product of the personal participation of its author in the complex political life of the territories liberated from the Bolsheviki, it naturally lacks the correct information which reveals the true state of affairs, and it therefore requires elucidation, modification, and corrections, not infrequently in flat refutation of the categorical assertions of the author—corrections tending to clarify why the organized social forces of the Ural and Siberia are supporting the Government led by Admiral Kolchak.

I shall begin with a comparison of Bolshevist and non-Bolshevist Russia, and will dwell only upon facts generally established. Soviet Russia is hungering and is literally dying from starvation. The territories of Orenburg, of the Ural Cossacks, the Northern Ural, Siberia, Transbaikalia, and the Far East, on the other hand, know no hunger. There is not only sufficiency of meat, butter, cheese and of breadstuffs in these regions, but with proper facilities of transportation, and in case of necessity quantities of these products can be shipped, without injustice to the Siberian population, to newly-liberated Russian territory. There is, indeed, hunger in the Yakutsk region, and, in part, in the Kirgisx territory. But, as is well known, the Yakutsk region lacked food under the Czar's régime and under the Kerensky Government as well. As regards the Kirgisz population, their territory received such substantial attention from the Bolsheviki that at present the chief source of existence of these dwellers of the steppes, their cattle, is either slaughtered or driven away by marauding bands, or was scattered and perished uncared for in the steppes. The consequences of this terrorization by Soviet detachments is famine and the dying out of the population.

Freer Press in Siberia.

Next—the press. In the satrapy of Lenin and Trotzky there are no other organs of the press except those that espouse Bolshevism. In Siberia, the Ural, and the Far East we find a large number of opposition publications conducted by various political factions, such as the People's Socialist Party, the Party of Socialists-Revolutionists, and the Social-Democratic Party. The Saria, Troodovaia Siber, Novy Ural, Respublikanets, Nashe Dyelo, Nash Put, and Svobodnoye Slovo very often criticise firmly and in no uncertain terms the acts of the Government, and they are not interfered with. And regardless of the very great technical difficulties, the Siberian press is growing and developing constantly. The number of newspapers is on the increase and the Co-operatives are lending their aid to insure the regularity and stability of publishing activities.

Next in order—the functioning of public and social institutions. In the Soviet territory the Zemstvo institutions and the municipalities were dispersed, the Co-operatives converted into subsidiary Soviet agencies, and the universities and schools of learning deprived of their principal guarantees—freedom of instruction and technical means. In the territories liberated from the Bolshevist dictatorship there are at present in operation free people's universities in Cheliabinsk, Ekaterinburg, Omsk, Tomsk, Irkutsk, and other cities. True, the Soviet constitution is not being espoused in the schools, but monarchist teachings are equally banished. The Zemstvo and municipal self-governments are functioning everywhere, with democratic majorities practically in every place, as normally as the difficult financial conditions resulting from the civil war and the wave of Bolshevism permit them. As regards the Co-operatives, they represent in the Ural and in Siberia independent and very strong organizations, fully democratic and continually developing not only along democratic lines, but in the educational and political domains as well.

Lastly—participation in Governmental activity and life is limited in Soviet territory to narrow party lines. In Omsk, however, there are represented at the State Economic Conference-People's Socialists, Socialist-Revolutionists, Social Democrats, representatives of the Co-operatives, of the municipalities, and the Zemstvos, and of the trading and commercial classes. In the Cabinet we find Professor Guins, a People's Socialist; Petrov, a Socialist-Revolutionist, and Shumilovsky, a Social Democrat. At the Head of the important Commission on Elections to the Constituent Assembly has been placed the well-known liberal journalist and public worker, A. Bielorusov, not a politician and a person removed from narrow partisanship. While Bielorusov cannot be classed as an "internationalist," his integrity and broad culture are sufficient guarantees that the electoral law and its application will be free from direct or indirect manipulations.

Difficulties in Siberia.

If I were to be asked whether, in my opinion, Siberia is already a paradise, and whether everything there is as it should be, I would reply that it is most certainly not, and for the following reasons:

1. There is still a considerable amount of Bolshevism in Siberia and the Far East, manifested through Bolshevist propaganda on the one hand, and monarchist agitation and strivings on the other hand. In other words, there is still some Bolshevism there from the Right and from the Left.

2. Bolshevism from the Left is being nurtured by Soviet agents, who spare no means to achieve results, and to a like degree by the general unhealthy popular psychology, which was never too normal or robust in Russia, and which is at a very low ebb now.

If Mr. Kornfield claims to have seen in Siberia an "indifferent" army, it signifies, however, very little. When these fresh troops in the rear, composed of workmen and peasants, get to the front and come face to face with the fruits of the Bolshevist régime in villages, settlements, cities, and workshops, they very quickly change into determined, fighting units. Along with them there are fighting and dying for Russia at the front the workers of the Ural, Kama, and the Volga, who have voluntarily organized themselves into a Republican Army, and these veterans are imbuing their new comrades with courage and fearlessness. The "indifference" of the recruits in the rear is thus quickly disappearing in action at the front.

3. Bolshevism from the Right, as represented in Siberia by the individual detachments of Kalmikov, Annenkov and company, on one hand, and the reactionary groups in Omsk, on the other, is a shameful and ill-savoring affair, equally menacing our democracy and the Government. It is no less menace to the rule of the people than its prototype from the Left, because it is sheer banditism in form and is demoralizing the life of the countryside where it operates.

These elements are few in number but very well organized. It was this group that had an active hand in the Omsk November coup, but, fortunately, the consequences have foiled their intentions. Admiral Kolchak and the President of the Council of Ministers, Vologodsky, did not adopt the course laid out by the reactionaries, and now this All-Russian Government is just as undesirable for this group as were the members of the late Directorate.

Supporters of Kolchak.

The actual supporting forces of the Government led by Admiral Kolchak are, first, the Cossack forces of the Ural and Orenburg; secondly, the population of the Northern Ural, and, thirdly, the Siberian Army at the front, a young and brave army that is now learning its lesson on the firing line of the significance of Bolshevism. The officers of this army are, in the great majority of cases, either men who belong to no party and are simply fulfilling their civic duty to their motherland or men with republican-democratic tendencies, who are fighting for democracy in its best sense, but who refrain from injecting party politics within the ranks of the army in order not to destroy its entity and forcefulness.

Who else is supporting the Kolchak Government except the army? Is it really true, as Mr. Kornfield asserts, that, as far as the other elements of the population are concerned, the Government is suspended in the air? My answer is that it is not true. The Kolchak Government is supported, beyond doubt, by the Siberian and Ural Co-operatives and by the Zemstvo and municipal self-governments. I have in my possession a mass of documentary proof in the form of reports, greetings, and resolutions of a chain of Zemstovs, Municipal Councils, and Co-operative organizations in Siberia, the Ural, and the Orenburg territory. Mr. Kornfield must not lose sight of the fact that when an individual Co-operator, Zemstvo worker, or plain citizen severely criticises the Government, he is only exercising his individual right to an opinion. The economic and social attitudes and platforms of public institutions and social nuclei are of necessity drafted and expressed by the organized centres of opinion of such public organizations.

The opinion of such democratically elected centres should be accepted by us as the true expression of the respective organizations. The Council of the All-Russian Co-operative Congresses, the Council of the Ural Co-operative Congresses and a long line of Zemstvo and municipal self-governments have recognized the Government of Kolchak, first of all, as a governmental centre which is re-erecting the destroyed statehood of Russia, the local Zemstvo and municipal life, which is building up a new fighting army and which is finally going forward to the realization of the plan of a Constituent Assembly, the desideratum of all the progressive and democratic elements of the population. These public and economic organizations, having discounted the complexity of the political and economic situation of the country, still in the midst of a civil war and grossly handicapped by a materially lowered popular consciousness, have concluded that it is impossible for them to set themselves apart from the general governmental scheme of activities, or to wash their hands of the situation in Pilate fashion. The interest of these public organizations in governmental affairs is constantly growing, and their sphere of participation in the general work is growing simultaneously.

Promises to be Fulfilled.

This is but a natural and inevitable process, and no amount of reactionary attempts will succeed in arresting its march. As B. Savinkov has correctly put it, the fate of the future Constituent Assembly and of democratic reforms in general depends not only upon the fulfillment by the Government of its solemn promises, but, to an equal degree, upon the ability of the organized Russian social forces to realize their own aspirations and to marshal their forces and policies energetically to the defense of the positions occupied by them within the Government.

The sole purpose of political activity in the territories liberated from the Bolsheviki, at present, should consist in the broadening out of the basis of the public and democratic organizations and their representation in the supreme governmental organ, the Council of Ministers. In other words, it means the gradual filling up of the Council of Ministers and the higher governmental institutions with persons whose political honesty, independence, and democratic convictions are beyond the shadow of a doubt. This will be more sound and solid than any "guarantees" given or exacted. We have such men in Siberia and abroad, and they must be unhesitatingly called upon to fulfill their civic and State duties.

On the other hand, the Government itself must put an end to all "ataman" plots, intrigues, and lawlessness. An ultimatum must be given to all those reactionary groups that are still striving to divert the governmental authority to old channels. Should these groups, nevertheless, not lay down their arms, resort must be had to military force in order to terminate once for all the activities of all elements that are weakening the Government and are giving cause to flare-ups of Bolshevism.

Generally speaking, the struggle with the reactionaries in Siberia does not present any insurmountable difficulties and holds no terrors. They are, I repeat, small in numbers and their influence is limited. Determination, consecutiveness, and straightforwardness are all that are required in dealing with them. If the Government is able to talk in terms of war with the Bolsheviki from the Left, it should apply the same language to the Bolsheviki from the Right. The Government of Admiral Kolchak, it must be stated, has fought and is still fighting them, but at present, when this Government has received, as it were, the sanction of the Allies, this fight must be carried on without reserve. If the State-preserving, organized democracy to whose support the recognition of Admiral Kolchak is due is a considerable extent must rally to the Government and support it as a body organically connected with it, and keeping in mind that the way of united action is the only way that achieves results—the Government, on its part, must end all reactionary phantoms from the Right, and unite within its fold all the healthy, democratic elements of the land. If it should fail to do so, it is likely to perish under the combined blows of Bolshevism—from the Right as well as from the Left.

We must remember steadfastly that Bolshevism draws its strength principally from our own errors and blunders. To foster Bolshevism anew through fresh dissensions and oversight would mean to act criminally toward that same motherland of ours to the salvation of which we have dedicated ourselves.

THIS BOOK COST $59,000

Illuminated Manuscript, "Lost" 300 Years, Fetches Record Price in London

THE highest price ever paid at public auction for a printed book or illuminated manuscript is $59,000, given by Quaritch in the recent sale at Sotheby's in London for the "Hours of Jeanne II., Queen of Navarre," one of the treasures in the collection of Henry Yates Thompson.

There were only thirty items in the sale, two of them books, the rest illuminated manuscripts, but they fetched the remarkable total of $261,800. Quaritch obtained four-fifths of the whole, paying for them $208,400. Among the audience were Mr. Thompson, Sir F. G. Kenyon, Director of the British Museum, and John Anderson, Jr., founder of the Anderson Galleries in this city.

When, as a schoolboy at Westminster, Bertram, fourth Earl of Ashburnham, started his library with the purchase in 1814 of "De Secretis", by Albertus Magnus for eighteen pence, he could not have dreamed that one day a manuscript from his collection would bring $59,000. "The Hours of Jeanne II." is a manuscript on 271 pages of vellum, containing 106 miniatures of various sizes. It was produced about 1336, and is in citron morocco binding with gold tooling of the end of the eighteenth century. Four hands, it is believed, are responsible for the miniatures.

Jeanne II. was a Princess not to be confused with her mother, Jeanne, wife of Louis X., but his only daughter, Countess d'Eureux, and as such acknowledged Queen of Navarre in her own right. When the Earl of Ashburnham bought the manuscript it had been "lost" for some 300 years, from the time of it first owner. It was discovered by the famous Petrese in a Paris convent.

The book contains a series of miniatures of King Louis, each with a portrait of that monarch and some scene from his life. It also has a portrait of Philip VI. of Valois and his wife, Jeanne of Burgundy, kneeling before the relics of the Sainte Chapelle, which had been brought to Paris from Constantinople.

Other Miniatures in Volume.

Among the other seventy-eight large miniatures in the book is one of King Louis going to Rome to be crowned. The little King, 11 years of age, is with his mother, Blanche of Castille, in a rich tilted wagon, accompanied by nobles on horseback. Another miniature represents Queen Jeanne, crowned and holding a book. She is addressed by her guardian angel, who holds her left hand, and points to an old beggar, who, with three children, beseeches alms.

This is considered one of the most beautiful conceptions of the miniaturists of the fourteenth century; the Queen, the angel, and the beggar group are given with exquisite skill and delicacy. Among the most remarkable features of the manuscript are the twelve pages of the Kalendar, with their curious illustration of the conflict between the old and the new dispensation, the church and the synagogue, which is found in three or four other famous books, and is of great beauty and significance.

The previous record for an illuminated manuscript was $83,000, in the Robert Hoe sale in this city, for the Pembroke "Book of Hours." In that same sale Henry E. Huntington paid $50,000 for a first edition of the Bible, printed by John Gutenberg at Mainz, "the forty-two-line Bible." It was the record price paid for a book, and still remains so, although the Queen Jeanne "Book of Hours" has brought $9,000 more. The late J. Pierpont Morgan once gave $30,000 for an "Evangelistarium." A book printed by William Caxton has fetched over $40,000. The manuscript revise, in the hand of John Milton's amanuensis, of the first book of "Paradise Lost" was obtained by Mr. Morgan's agent for $25,000 some years ago at Sotheby's. Gabriel Wells paid $28,000 for the first four folios of Shakespeare at the Anderson Galleries during the last season.

Previous High Prices.

Other high prices at the Thompson sale were $21,000 for a volume of four treatises, "La Sainte Abbaye," &c., a manuscript of the fourteenth century, originally associated with a fifth, "La Somme le Roy," already in the British Museum, where this one now takes its place; $17,250 for the "Evangelistarium Graecum," twelfth century, a Byzantine example, which in the Hamilton Palace sale in 1889 brought $2,400, and $6,500 for the "Portulano" of the Genoese, Baptista Agnese. The "Missal of the Carmelites of Nantes," containing a miniature of Duke John of Bretagne, being weighed in the scales against the golden treasures of his dominions, fetched $7,000. The "Book of Hours" of Talbot, Earl of Shrewsbury, taken from his body when slain in an affray with Bretons in 1453, went for $5,250.

The "Gallican Missal," of about 1060, with forty miniatures, brought $8,000. The Breviary of Marguerite de Bar, otherwise known as the "Verdun Breviary," of about 1290, went for $15,500. A "Martyrology," of the eleventh century, brought $8,000 and the "Pontifical," of Andrea Calderini, fourteenth century, $10,000. "Tiber Trojanus," fourteenth century brought $6,125; the Latin Gospels, ninth century manuscript, $8,875, and a manuscript with thirty-eight miniatures, dating from 1410, made for presentation to Iskander, the grandson of Tamerlane, $25,000.

Y. W. C. A. ROOM REGISTRY

Organization Hopes to Fit Tenants to Their Quarters as Part of Solution of Housing Problem

A CLEARING house for the registry of all vacant "rented rooms" in the city suitable for women and girls is the contribution which the Young Women's Christian Association is about to make toward the solution of New York's housing problem. The plan is a development and extension of the organization's existing Room Registry, which has served young women for many years through its local branches.

Under the new scheme, which will go into effect this week, housekeepers with rooms to rent are invited to register them at the nearest Y. W. C. A. branch. After careful investigation, full data concerning the quarters are sent to all the other branch offices, and a system is worked out by which applicants at any branch may be referred to any section of the city in which they wish to live. There is no charge for the registry, which is free both to householders and to applicants for rooms.

"This is to be an intensive as well as an extensive service," said Miss Florence B. Potter, who has been placed at the head of the central bureau controlling all the branch registries. "We shall investigate not only the houses where rooms are offered for rent, but the references of the tenants who are to occupy them. It is as important to safeguard the community as it is to care for the stranger in the city, and the housekeeper has a right to protection from women tenants who do not pay their rent or who have undesirable visitors.

"Not only this, but we shall make an earnest effort to suit the tenant to her environment. Instead of sending applicants at random to a list of addresses, we shall try to see that they are referred to neighborhoods and housekeepers whose general interests are akin to their own. This will be done by forming personal acquaintance with the housekeeper in each case, and sending to her just such people as will fit best into the atmosphere of the home. On the other hand, we shall try to place young, inexperienced girls in homes where they may have parlor privileges and some chaperonage, while the mature, self-reliant woman will be sent where she will have full freedom and independence. This demands a personal study of each case, and each branch has a tactful, sympathetic woman to undertake the task.

"Special attention will be given to handling large numbers of applicants in periods of unusual congestion, such as the Summer session at Columbia University, where we have been asked to assist in finding places for 1,500 students.

"Housewives who perhaps have never rented their rooms are asked to aid by giving over an occasional extra room to some special young girl, lonely woman, or student who needs the background of a home. Those having rooms to rent are asked to register them at the branches nearest their homes."

The branches are located as follows: Central Branch, corner Lexington Avenue and Fifty-third Street; Harlem Branch, 240 Lenox Avenue, West Side Branch, Fiftieth Street and Tenth Avenue; Bronx Branch, 329 East 170th Street.

A special branch for negro women is maintained at 131 West 132d Street.

ENGLAND'S AIR FORCE AND OURS

F. D. Roosevelt, Opposing Union of Naval and Army Aviation, Talks of Great Britain's Feverish Effort for Aerial Supremacy

The following article by the Assistant Secretary of the Navy is printed by special permission of U. S. Air Service, the official publication of the Army and Navy Air Service Association. Mr. Roosevelt speaks of the "feverish effort" of Great Britain "to expand her air forces to a point so far in excess of any other nation that she can virtually control the air in the face of all opposition."

By FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT,
Assistant Secretary of the Navy.

EVENTUALLY, when a history is written, the achievements of the naval aviation service will rank among the very highest in the record of the great war. As in the case of the army, the Spring of 1917 found the naval aviation far behind the European nations at war in almost every respect. We had few pilots, fewer planes, negligible building facilities, and, to state frankly, insufficient knowledge of the needs or method of building up a large operating organization.

The other side is the date, Nov. 11, 1918, when the navy had in actual operation a great number of seaplanes, dirigibles and kite balloon stations on the coasts of France, England, and Ireland. That the navy is particularly proud of is the fact that these stations were actually running and carrying out the purposes for which they were built, i. e., offensive and defensive operations against the existing enemy.

I will not here go into the details of these aviation stations in Europe, nor of the coastal stations which were completed and operating for the defense of our own Atlantic coast. The fact remains that as a result of the work the activity of enemy submarines was greatly curtailed in European waters. It is clearly shown by the records that up to the Autumn of 1917 the critical point for all ships entering British and French waters was at the so-called "neck of the bottle," in other words, the sea area close to shore, where all lanes of shipping converged.

Much had been done by patrol boats, destroyers and other craft to maintain a close watch over these areas, but the operations of enemy submarines continued, and it became obvious that additional means must be employed against them. These means were found in the development of the American Naval Aviation Stations, and from the time these stations began to operate the existence of enemy submarines in these waters became more and more difficult. Finally, toward the close of the war, submarine attacks close to the French, British or Irish coast had decreased to such an extent as to be almost negligible, and the records show that the German policy had changed, and that the orders to submarines were for operations further and further away from the coast, even up to a distance of 400 or 500 miles from the shore.

And now that naval aviation has proved the practicability of its wartime policy with respect to its equipment, and the training of its personnel by accomplishing the epoch-making feat of flying across the ocean, what further proof is needed to fix emphatically in the minds of the entire country the wonderful development of naval aviation in a year and a half's time, and what further arguments are necessary to demonstrate the further practicability of permitting the future development of naval aviation to remain one of the functions of the navy?

Commander Towers and his heroic crew deserve all the honors which they are receiving and more, but it must not be forgotten that the project of the transatlantic flight was first undertaken as a wartime measure. The design of the planes, their motive power and equipment, was the work of naval aviation and the entire project was purely a naval affair. Naval aviation being one of the potent subdivisions of the navy necessarily involved the complete organization of the navy in the over-ocean voyage. Patrol ships, mother ships, tenders, supply ships, and destroyers were used in connection with the flight, not only as a safeguard, but more particularly for the gathering of scientific knowledge to be used in future transatlantic flying.

A number of individuals, possibly well meaning in their intentions, have recently been uttering platitudes in favor of a consolidation of the various air services of the country into a united air service. The arguments advanced are not sufficiently well defined to permit particularly intelligent criticism to be made. Their continuance, however, is sufficiently persistent to warrant a discussion of the desirability of such a union of effort as is seemingly contemplated in the various conflicting rumors now current.

Wasteful Duplication.

If as suggested, for economy's sake, we combine efforts in production we immediately set up duplication which is the most wasteful form of extravagance known to students of political economy and finance; in fact, it is the acme of governmental folly. The splendid Procurement Division of the Army Quartermaster's Department, built up with the knowledge gained by years of peacetime study and the trying conditions of war, is fully competent to purchase and contract for all the aircraft that the army will need to fill the comparatively modest demands of peace; and the tremendous purchasing power of the Navy Bureau of Supplies and Accounts can readily cope with the needs of the navy also, subject, perforce, to the needs of a peacetime program, which is naturally one of experimentation and development rather than one of production and expansion.

By this it is not meant that the army and navy air forces should immediately drop into comparative non-productivity or desuetude, but while we should build and maintain sufficient machines for our program of national defense, it will in no sense tax the abilities of our present purchasing power, as above stated, and therefore another purchasing agency will be of no value economically.

If it is intended to take the manufacture of aircraft and motive power out of the hands of the manufacturing industries at large and concentrate them in a centralized governmental board, we at once paralyze the entire industry at its source. Competitive genius is the key to the manufacturing world; stifled by over-regulation, or confiscated by law, industry dies. Industry may be assisted by governmental benevolence when such industry is in its infancy, but when expanded to its full strength industry is the nation's backbone. Our industries have been the index of our development and our mainstay in peace and war.

In Heaven's name, do not brain industry with the club of politics, especially the youthful and growing industry of aircraft manufacture.

Full Scope for Experiment.

Let us give the manufacturers and experimentalists full scope. The bread of encouragement cast on the waters of industry will return a thousandfold in the guise of progressive development and productive economy.

Without doubt the Post Office, the Treasury, and other departments of the Government, when pressed to the point of unification, will use much the same arguments as those outlined above. Unification? No. But whole-hearted cooperation and interchange of plans and ideas between the separate air forces is not only desirable but necessary.

It is understood that some who are advocating the adoption of a united air service are giving as an example the United Air Service of Great Britain, which was brought about as a war measure. Arguments of this sort are pernicious in the extreme.

In the first place, we have nothing in common with Great Britain, which is spending $325,000,000 this year in a feverish effort to expand her air forces to a point so far in excess of any other nation that she can virtually control the air in the face of all opposition. She controls the sea; why not the air, is her argument.

In the second place, Great Britain maintained a united air service in name only. The lighter-than-air branch of British aviation never left the separate control of the Admiralty and throughout the entire theatre of war operations there were numbers of independent British organizations and squadrons; and further, steps are now being taken to discontinue the United Air Service in favor of separate control by the military and naval establishments.

One thing, however, in the British air program deserves our attention and that is the co-operation between the Air Ministry and aircraft industry which extends even into the field of professional aeronautic societies. The freest co-operation and interchange of information is maintained between the British Government and the Aero Club. It would seem advisable that we should recognize legitimate scientific societies, lending them aid, utilizing their professional information, and encouraging their enthusiasm.

Unity of Command Argument.

The most pernicious and harmful argument advanced for a unified service is the alleged advantage of a unity of command and operation. Nothing could be more absurd. The army must control its air service. The ability to coordinate all branches of the service, combining its activities at the will of the Commander in Chief, is one of the fundamentals of strategy. Scouting, patrolling, reconnoissance and defensive programs in which the air force plays the predominant part, cannot be divorced from a united command which is always the one essential to success of any military campaign. The great war proved the truth of this statement.

The separation of the air force of a great army from the absolute control of the Commander in Chief would be disastrous and should no more be thought of than the separation of the Motor Transport Service, the Chemical Warfare Branch, or the Quartermaster Department. If these arguments are true on the part of the army, they apply with even greater force in the case of the navy. Naval aviation being so very much an integral part of the navy, so entirely nautical in its application and functions and in the problems concerned, the separation from the navy of its aviation organization borders on the ridiculous.

The mission of naval aviation is cooperation with the fleet, its activities being substantially as follows: bombing enemy's men-of-war and bases; protection of its own fleet from hostile craft; scouting, reporting movements of enemy over smoke screens, in low visibility, and over the horizon; detecting mine fields, torpedoes, and submarines; shot-spotting, and escort and convoy work.

It will readily be seen than only men whose training must be controlled by the navy can be depended upon to carry out the work of naval aviation and expect any measure of success.

The navy at the present moment has ample facilities for training its personnel, both officers and enlisted men, for its aviation service. The results of our own investigation and development, and the lessons learned by ourselves and our allies during the war, have been incorporated in the present training system, which is fully abreast if not in advance of the development of naval aviation at the present moment. A separate air force with a scattering of effort would be a step backward, and with respect to training, would be another instance of expensive duplication.

The functionings of the navy are so purely technical that they are constantly changed as science advances, and naval aviation to be of the greatest value must be an integral part of the navy, subject to change and development with other existing branches, such as the Submarine Service and Mine Laying Division. There is absolutely no reason on the part of the army or the navy for a separate air service. The army controls the situation over the land; the navy confines its activities to the sea, and while they must of necessity work with the heartiest cooperation, their functions are so entirely different that disaster would follow the removal of command from either branch in favor of a third organization.

The height of ambition of some individuals is to be caught in the limelight of publicity, to be the head of this or that commission, or to be known as the man who tore wide open existing governmental organizations. This may account for some of the arguments for a separate air service. If rank and emolument are the real reasons; if we are to embarrass the army and the navy and the future military value of the air service of those defensive branches of our Government for the glorification of self seekers, we will be stepping backward and the lessons of the great war will be lost.

This is unthinkable. It will not bear the scrutiny of thoughtful patriots; and the navy will not be a party to any such program, but will insist on the retention of its own aviation force. Not until we do away with armies and navies altogether, or until the development of aircraft relegates land forces and the navy to the scrap heap will the time arrive for a United Air Service.

PEACE DELAYS AND TURKEY

President of Robert College Says Situation in the Near East Has Accumulated Complications

By J. OLIN HOWE.

IT is not a question of ridding Europe of the Turk—that in itself is of little moment if the Turkish Government is permitted to establish itself in nearby Asia—but of ridding the world of the menace of a Turkish Government. At least, that is the way Dr. Caleb F. Gates sees it. Dr. Gates is President of Robert College, Constantinople, and for thirty-eight years he has been in the Near East, with but an occasional visit to the United States. Few men not natives know the eastern end of the Mediterranean as well. He was able to keep Robert College open all through the war.

"It would only create another Balkans to parcel out the Turkish Empire as has been suggested," he says. "So long as the Turk is allowed to maintain his Government anywhere he will make trouble for the other nations. It doesn't matter whether his capital is Constantinople or some place in Western Asia. Unless the League of Nations or one of the nations in the League takes over the Turks in toto and administers their affairs, the Turkish question will continue an international embarrassment. Nor will establishing a mandate over Constantinople and what is left of Turkey in Europe be of any advantage.

"The longer the delay, moreover, the more troublesome the situation becomes. If terms of peace could have been settled upon at the beginning of the year, problems which have become very complicated because of the dragging out of the Peace Conference would have been simple of solution. I should like to have seen a peace treaty written covering the few main points and establishing the League of Nations at once, and then let the League deal with all these lesser matters which have been taking the time of the conference.

Time by the Forelock.

"While the world has waited, the French have gone into Syria, the Italians have entered Turkey at Adalia, and the Greeks at Smyrna, the British have consolidated their control in Mesopotamia and along the eastern end of the Bagdad railway and have swung east from Palestine, and it is proposed that the United States take a mandate over Armenia.

"The British have a wonderful country in Mesopotamia. With the development they will give it, that land will provide all Europe with grain. Sir William Willcox, who made the surveys for the irrigation projects which have meant so much to the Nile country, has partly completed surveys for the same purpose in Mesopotamia, and this work will be pushed as rapidly as possible.

"The British are very hesitant about a mandate for the whole of Turkey, however, and look with little favor on one for Constantinople. They would hardly consider taking the Caliphate away from the Sultan. By dealing summarily with the Turk they fear to offend millions of Mohammedans in India and Africa, but my feeling is that they greatly exaggerate the danger of this. Moslem leaders had no success in starting a holy war while the world war was on.

"Unless the whole of Turkey is placed under a mandate—if the Turkish Government is left to manage its own affairs in any portion of the territory it had before the war—only one result can follow, misgovernment and rapid increase in the bitter unrest with which it will begin. And Armenia will take the brunt of it. It will not help matters to have America take a mandate over Armenia and one over Constantinople; indeed, it would be better that Armenia be given to England, as bordering on Mesopotamia; but the real remedy is for Christian civilization to take control in Western Asia.

"There is no protection for the Armenians otherwise. No matter how large a territory is finally awarded to them—and they can hardly make good their demand for the very considerable amount they claim—they will not dwell by themselves in any part of it. Everywhere Turks and Kurds are mixed up with Armenians in the same towns, and the Moslems outnumber the Christians four to one.

"This question of a mandate over Armenia and other portions of the Near East is bound to come up in this country soon, and people ought to be informed upon it. The United States can do a big work for Armenia if it will. The Turks have great respect for Americans and covet our good-will. Yet to bring settled conditions while feeding Armenia with one hand and holding off the Turk with the other will be a big task for any nation. If the League of Nations would give us a mandate over all Turkey we should still have a man-size job, but America could do it.

"One thing is certain in any case—some nation must take over the relief work in Armenia and the Caucasus. It is altogether too big a thing for private funds. The $30,000,000 which has been raised won't be nearly enough. The Caucasus alone will require a million a month for at least six months. It is impossible to give too extreme an idea of the destitution which prevails. The various accounts of Turkish atrocities and Armenian sufferings which have been printed do not begin to tell the story. They can't.

"President Maine of Grinnell College was in Constantinople just before I left, and he told me of having been at Alexandropol a few days before. On the morning he left, 100 dead were found in the streets, and this is nothing uncommon. The people are dying of starvation by wholesale. The stories told by Armenian women who are just now returning from Turkish harems and Kurdish fastnesses are heartrending. With a commission from Constantinople I visited Ourfa and other places along the line of the railway across Asiatic Turkey some time since. Before the war there were a thousand homes in Ourfa. When we were there not over fifty were still standing. The others had been wantonly destroyed by the Turks, mainly by Government orders and not at all for any military reason.

Relief Commission's Work.

"The relief commission has $4,000,000 worth of foodstuffs there now and 400 workers, and is distributing these to the stricken people as fast as possible. Fifteen hospital units of a hundred beds each have been placed about the country, and already most of their beds are occupied. Two of these hospitals are in Beirut and others are in Constantinople, Konia, Adana, Aleppo, Mardin, Harpoot, Sivas, Merzivan, Trebizond, and Smyrna. Fifty workers have gone to the Caucasus, via Batoum to Tiflis and Erivan. Conditions there are unspeakable, but it is not yet possible to bring back Armenians who have fled there.

"America has kept these people alive. During the two years of war after diplomatic relations were broken off with Turkey a committee of which Miss Elizabeth Dodge was Secretary, Luther Fowle Treasurer, and I Chairman distributed relief as best we could to such of them as we could reach. We put out about four million dollars' worth of foodstuffs and supplies.

"It was a task to keep Robert College open during the war, of course; a miracle, some have termed it; but we have just graduated a class of thirty-one—six from the Engineering School and twenty-five from the college. Our Engineering School has done good work in these years. Every time the local authorities in Constantinople got stuck in some engineering work they would come up to us for help, and we were always able to straighten out their difficulty.

"Our boys did splendid work in Greece during the war, maintaining ten Y. M. C. A. huts with the Greek troops, and receiving from that Government the fullest recognition which it accords to any Greek gymnasium. Now the greatest need of the Near East is leaders, and we hope to train greater numbers of these. We plan extensions for the college, which consists of an Engineering School, college, and preparatory school. Our idea is to move the preparatory school further away from the college and expand the latter into a university, and also enlarge the preparatory school. The solution of the whole Eastern question lies in education. The peoples must work out their problems themselves."

Attitude Toward Germany.

"Is it a fact," Dr. Gates was asked, "that the Turks are sick of the Germans, tired of their bargain, and sorry they ever made it?"

"Indeed, yes," he replied. "Nobody could be sicker of anything than the Turks are of the Germans, and have been for a long time. Their resentment was aroused at the very beginning, when the Germans came into Constantinople with their champagnes and fast cars and high living. While many Turks were suffering privations, the Germans were living in luxury at their expense. The German attitude was well expressed by a German woman who came out to Constantinople and was shown the sights. She looked over the town and out on the beautiful Bosporus and exclaimed, 'And to think that all this belongs to us!'

"Three men were responsible for Turkey's arrangement with Germany, Talaat Pasha, Djemal Pasha, and Enver Pasha, and they did not represent the whole people by any means. But they were able to control the Government."

"Meanwhile, as to the Balkans," Dr. Gates was asked. "Are conditions settling down there?"

"Decidedly they are not," he replied. "They are growing worse and worse. If the Peace Conference could have come to something early in the year, the Balkan situation would have been comparatively easy to settle, but every day's delay increases the tension. Bulgaria especially desires the friendship of the United States. The Bulgarians, of course, do not wish to become the subjects of a mandatary. They desire to work out their own salvation. But Bulgaria is anxious for the aid of this country, hoping that our leaders in finance and engineering will assist in her getting on her feet again.

"The Albanians, however, are in just the opposite frame of mind. Albania would be very glad of an American protectorate and must have the protection of some powerful nation to go on as an independent State. Greece would be glad to have the United States take Albania. Venizelos has said that Greece would materially modify her claims in Southern Albania if America would become the mandatary for Albania."

PEACE COMMUNITY SERVICE

Plans to Continue for the General Public the Work Begun for War Camps

THROUGH the end of the war and the imminence of an early and durable peace will take the familiar two first names officially off the stationery of the War Camp Community Service on Sept. 1, there will be more than enough significance left in the remainder of their letterhead to warrant the liveliest interest in it among those who tread the fertile fields of community betterment and happiness.

On the above date Uncle Sam, who has been the ready and generous backer of all activities connected with the W. C. C. S. since the United States entered the war, withdraws his cash but not his interest from the work and leaves it to "Community Service" itself to fight its battles alone minus the Federal exchequer and the "War Camp" part. Aside from this the Government will still be its hearty and practical friend, and has given assurances to that effect.

In preparation of its coming severance from governmental supervision and maintenance actual incorporation of "Community Service" was consummated about two and a half months ago in the State of Connecticut, with a capital approximating $2,000,000. The latter represents private volunteer subscriptions from sources long interested in the work, and was accumulated in the short space of four months. It was a case of quiet, spontaneous giving, with barely a vestage of solicitation about it. Naturally such an unostentatious "campaign" for funds was met by public-spirited and well-to-do New Yorkers, who saw the need of perpetuating the "Community Service" idea and widening its sphere of action and influence.

Meanwhile not a penny from the budget Uncle Sam has set aside for War Camp Community Service projects may be used to promote his offspring's enterprises. The bookkeeping arrangements of the twin services are even now being kept rigidly apart.

Far-reaching Benefits.

The far-reaching benefits, not fully understood now, which have sprung from this nation-wide movement; the function it has performed in directing men's minds to the ethical and spiritual good that can accrue from rightly conducted play and song and the proper and composite exercise of the recreative and educative faculties of man, have led friends of the War Camp Community Service to engage their talents toward conserving and augmenting this work. They view it as the most happy instrumentality that the war has produced to help concentrate the soldier and civilian mind on the normal and rational opportunities of life. The Red Cross, they say, was doubtless the "greatest mother in the world" to the boys "over there," and the Salvation Army their closest "pals," but the "great magician" on this side of the water during the time of agony and stress and after, the agency which performed the delicate feat of keeping the national temperament at "par," was the W. C. C. S.

Already plans are afoot within the newly organized Community Service for a campaign, starting in New York and extending all over the country, to energize and extend its various functions and to lay the foundation for a permanent place in American life. Though the aims of the new organization will be analogous to those of the old in vital respects, it will seek to embrace as adherents and beneficiaries the rank and file of American manhood and womanhood. This is the sequence of being happily put back again from a war to a peace footing in which, day by day, it will become less necessary to have one's uniform on or discharge papers to enter the charmed circle of Community Service and to partake of its fare.

The Readjustment Program.

The readjustment program of Community Service principally touches three things which, in themselves, have been the mainstays of the older organization. They include a more highly organized information bureau with a corresponding increase in the number of booths which will supply a greater variety of information and data relative to the opportunities afforded by the service and which will promote a wider community interest and intelligence. Among other things their function will consist in giving more detailed information concerning courses in education, (including agriculture,) music, art, drama, pageantry, public speaking, athletics, &c., and for affording free training to those who wish to qualify as instructors or volunteers.

Under this head comes the decision to continue the volunteer Entertainment and Instruction Bureau along the present lines, with a publicity campaign, operated at first from within the organization, to let the people know what is being done.

The second objective of the new body will be the further co-ordination of attractive common interests to be professionally directed, yet without linking together separate organizations. All volunteer effort to stand distinctly on its own feet, as it were, but still be housed under one roof, to carry the simile further.

The third bulwark to be strengthened is that of instruction in common recreational and educational interests. This part of the problem will engage a large share of time from the managers of Community Service to make it as effective as possible. Among the things contemplated is the establishment of public forums for public education and discussion, the object being to promote a readier and clearer interpretation of Government and State aims and clear up questions that have perhaps been stumbling blocks.

What They Like to Do.

Regarding this outline of the future achievements mapped out for Community Service, Marius McGuffey, manager of the Volunteer Entertainment and Speakers' Bureau of the New York War Camp Community Service, has this to say:

"When the war was over, and we realized that we would soon discontinue our war camp activities, the first thought was of the tremendous economic loss to the country of the public service of such a big organization. But in my department of entertainment the point which came home to me with most force was the loss to the volunteer who had had for the first time a real and educational opportunity for self-expression.

"Over and over again have I seen these young would-be stars, musicians, dramatists, public speakers, athletes, and entertainers in many lines developing added ability—not only giving joy to their soldier-audiences but receiving even more than they gave. I saw instantly that no educational course with its stilted opportunities for putting into practice the knowledge gained, could advance the individual to any such degree as this practical scheme which was already giving me all the talent I could use and with better results every day.

"I felt that for that reason if for no other we must continue this volunteer philanthropy until it drew within its everwidening circle the discontented, restless element, as well as the foreign-born citizen, who would thus gladly take advantage of its harmonizing and Americanizing influences and the educational opportunities which naturally come with it.

"We have—at least a few of us have—learned that the newcomer and the unfortunate among us do not care to have 'philanthropic education' put forcibly down their throats like a dose of bad medicine, with the assurance that it is good for them. Give men or women in their leisure time something to do that they like to do, make them feel that they are needed, and that they 'belong,' and you will not need to spend money for Secret Service men to find out what they are doing, nor soldiers to shoot down their red flags."

Mr. McGuffey would increase the work of the Entertainment Bureau rather than lessen it, because he believes that the present trend of the public mind toward amusement and recreation should be taken advantage of to secure the people's interest in community centres and divert the attention from disturbing influences. He believes that good chorus and dramatic work, athletic instruction, addresses and pageants, which teach history and good Americanism, can be used to counteract such sores as Bolshevism and disorganization generally which threaten some social centres. His theory is that the story of any successful life will prove to the observer that the kind of amusement or recreation which that person chose for his leisure hours was a large determining factor of the after quality of his life. Public forums, entertainments, and good shows generally, he says, once popularized, will cause the memory of the soon-to-be-banished saloon to fall deep into the subconsciousness of men.

THE NAVY'S BIG U.

ONE of the big ships of the Atlantic Fleet which has a particularly fine ship spirit, if it may be put that way, is the Utah, now flagship of the Fifth Division and lying in the North River. The big U, as the man call it, seems to be peculiarly an object of pride with the crew, and the uncommonly good record of the vessel from the very beginning is largely the result of that pride. And when more items are added to that good record the Utah's men want the rest of the world to know about it. It was one of them who called attention to the fact that in the recent full-power speed run from Guantanamo Bay to the Ambrose Channel Lightship the Utah literally walked away from some of the newer ships when she made a sustained run for four hours with an average speed of 21.6 knots per hour. Another Fifth Division ship, the Delaware, did a little better—21.77 knots—but her engines had just been overhauled, and on the slight before the speed run the Utah's starboard feedwater heater was ruptured. Her engine room force worked for fourteen hours without stop, and just a short time before the signal for "stand by" for the beginning of the race was given the damaged heater was again in condition.

The Utah, which was one of those ships that for months cruised about in European waters waiting to get a chance at the German men-of-war, has been one of the most consistent all-around performers in the fleet since she was first commissioned with Admiral Benson, ranking officer of the navy, then a Captain, as her skipper. Besides being a leader in gunnery and engineering, her crews' teams have captured many honors in athletics and sports.

Ice Cream for The Picnic Freezing While They Ride

FROM little David up to Grandma, all the Grays delight in a roadside picnic—by the side of a rambling brook, in the edge of the cool woods, whenever and wherever it happens handy.

But until recently the best part of the picnic—especially for the children—had to be left out. They couldn't have ice cream!

The old wooden freezer was too much trouble—took too long before starting—and too mussy to carry in the car. While if they bought cream on the way, it usually melted before they were ready to eat it.

But now their roadside lunches always include all the pure home-made ice cream they can eat—and it never gets soft or mushy; and no bother or trouble at all. The solution was an Auto Vacuum Freezer—the new kind of freezer that does the freezing entirely automatically; no turning required, no attention whatever.

Before they start, Mrs. Gray simply puts a little ice and salt in one end of her Auto Vacuum Freezer, pours the cream mixture in the other end, then sets the freezer out of the way in the car and forgets all about it—never gives it another thought until luncheon time.

The cream freezes automatically while they ride—is hard, smooth and velvety within 30 minutes after it is put in the freezer. And best of all—it stays hard for as long as 8 hours without any more ice or attention. You do not have to touch the freezer until ready to serve the cream.

Takes very little space in the car; and absolutely no muss—not a drop can leak out, either from the ice or the cream compartment. And no need to pack it in a wet blanket or bother with extra ice.

* * * * * *

The Auto Vacuum Freezer has been tested and approved by Good Housekeeping Institute, Today's Housewife, Housewife's League, etc.—and by thousands of users in all parts of the world.

* * * * * *

The cream compartment opens from the top, the ice compartment from the bottom, each entirely separated from the other—absolutely no chance for the ice or salt to spoil the cream.

As light in weight as a piece of aluminum wear—and as easy to keep clean. Nothing to take apart. Nothing to rust. Nothing to get out of order.

Freezes any quantity of cream desired, from a pint up to two quarts.

Requires only a third to a half as much ice as old style freezers—soon pays for itself by the saving on ice alone.

* * * * * *

Yet with all these advantages the price is only $5. Why not get one today? Then it will be no trouble to treat the family to pure home-made ice cream as often as they want it.

Be Careful What You Wash Your Hair With

Most soaps and prepared shampoos contain too much alkali, which is very injurious, as it dries the scalp and makes the hair brittle.

The best thing to use is Mulsified cocoanut oil shampoo for this is pure and entirely greaseless. It's very cheap and beats anything else all to pieces. You can get this at any drug store, and a few ounces will last the whole family for months.

Simply moisten the hair with water and rub it in, about a teaspoonful is all that is required. It makes an abundance of rich, creamy lather, cleanses thoroughly, and rinses out easily. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and is soft, fresh looking, bright, fluffy, wavy, and easy to handle. Besides, it loosens and takes out every particle of dust, dirt and dandruff.

PLANS TO IMPROVE HARLEM RIVER

Picturesque High Bridge May Be Destroyed in Interest of Better and Safer Navigation

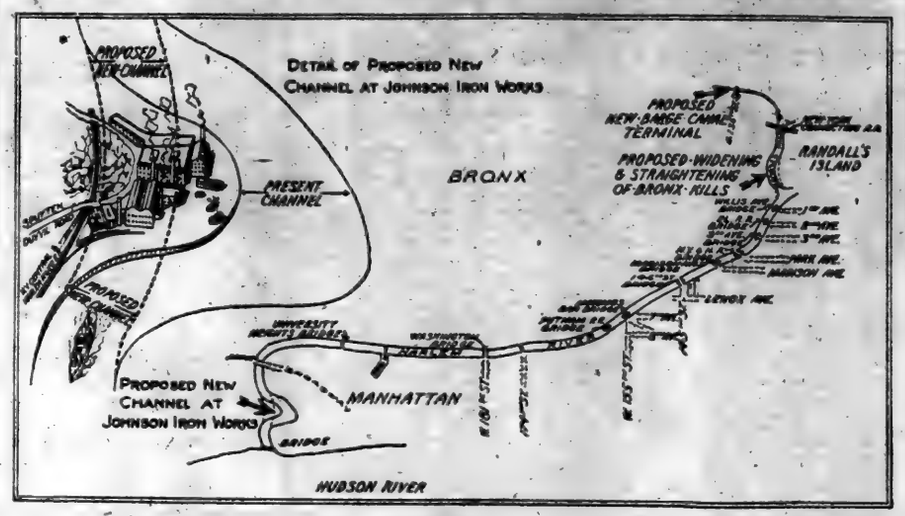
HIGH BRIDGE, which for nearly three generations has contributed to the picturesqueness of upper Manhattan Island and to the charm of the Harlem River, is losing its friends. The word has gone forth from the men who are looking to the future of the shipping and commercial development of the Port of New York that the historic structure must go. Not only, they say, and with good reason, does it prohibit a great deal of necessary water traffic, but it is also a menace to navigation, owing to the short distance between the piers supporting its graceful arches.

The boats which would use the Harlem River today, especially those coming from the barge canal, require more room for a margin of safety than is permitted by the existing piers with their dangerous abutments and the swift currents thereby created. Still another argument of considerable weight is that the old bridge has outlived its usefulness. Originally constructed in 1843 to carry the Croton water over the river into Manhattan Island, and finally completed in 1849, the bridge no longer serves as a necessary water carrier. A bed rock tunnel under the river carries an even larger supply of water from the improved Croton system and the Ashokan Dam reservoir than was needed when High Bridge was built.

Lovely, But Useless.

High Bridge, therefore, serves only an aesthetic purpose. It was never used by vehicles. The approaches to it from both sides are from steep flights of stone steps, and since the completion of the new water tunnel its use has virtually been limited to a few persons who enjoy a peaceful walk across it and the scenic attractions it affords.

A few years ago, when the navigable improvement of the Harlem River assumed prime importance, the proposal was made to save the bridge by cutting out some of the central spans. That plan has now been abandoned by all of the trade and commercial organizations interested in the improvement of the river, owing not only to the expense but to the recognition of the fact that it would fail to meet the requirements for future river traffic. It is estimated that it will cost $200,000 to remove the bridge and about $300,000 to alter it.



Abandonment of High Bridge, for the greater benefit of the city, was advocated at the first hearing recently held in this city before the new Board of Conference appointed by Governor Smith under the provisions of the Dowling-Healy measure, passed at the last Legislature, to consider definite plans for improving the navigation of the Harlem River. The members of that conference are Edward S. Walsh, Superintendent of Public Works; Frank M. Williams, State Engineer, and Murray Hulbert, Commissioner of Docks and Director of the Port of New York.

In its work, the Board of Conference has three problems. High Bridge is one. The second is the straightening of the ship channel at Spuyten Duyvil by cutting off an edge of the point projecting from the Bronx side, on which is situated the Johnson Iron Works, and the third is the deepening of the Bronx Kills, which enters the Harlem just below the Willis Avenue bridge.

Arches Too Narrow.

High Bridge has fifteen semi-circular arches, of which eight span the river. These arches have an eighty-foot clearance, but the abutments, instead of being placed at right angles to the axis of the bridge, were placed east and west. This situation sets up dangerous currents and makes the navigable space much less than eight feet for large draft boats.

The barges designed for the Barge Canal are about 42 feet wide and 300 feet long, and two of them abreast, with a tug of 29-foot beam between, would require more than 100 feet to pass safely. Tug masters have for years regarded the navigation between the bridge arches as dangerous, because the currents have a tendency to swerve the boat to one side, and it is in danger of scraping the stones forming the abutments.

Despite its handicaps, reports show that navigation is growing rapidly on the Harlem River and the importance with which the industrial interests of the city regard the proposals for improved facilities was shown by the large representation at the first hearing before the Board of Conference. Charles E. Reid of the Harlem Board of Trade stated that more than a hundred prospective manufacturers had been lost to the Bronx in the last few years solely from the fact that they could not obtain satisfactory water transportation. He said that the improvement of the Spuyten Duyvil channel would open a safe water thoroughfare for hundreds of boats which are now compelled to go down or up the North River.

The Harlem ship canal, at about 2,000 feet east of the Hudson River at Spuyten Duyvil, passes through an arc of practically 180 degrees making a sharp double reverse curve, which causes tidal currents during both ebb and flow tides which are dangerous to navigation. This channel was completed about twenty years ago on the recommendation of the Government Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors. That board now recognizes that the work was not perfect, and an appropriation of $850,000 has been made by Congress for straightening the channel. The New York Legislature has appropriated $1,000,000 for the purchase of the necessary property from the Johnson Iron Works needed for the change. During the war the Johnson Works was engaged in the manufacture of munitions, and so no progress has been made toward acquiring the land.

Plans for Improvement.

The Haffen plan, which has been very generally favored, proposes to cut off the point of the Johnson property and widen the present channel to 650 feet, thus reducing the arc of the curve. Oscar Theis of the Harlem Board of Trade suggests that the curve of the present channel might be filled up and this newly-made land be given to the Johnson company. That would transfer the iron works to the Manhattan side.

Deepening of the Bronx Kills at the lower extremity has for its main object making Hell Gate less dangerous to navigation. The main Hell Gate current could be reduced thus about two miles an hour. Anything that will lower the velocity of the current will add to the safety of navigation. With the widening of Bronx Kills most of the smaller craft would prefer to use that route in preference to going through Hell Gate, and thus give greater freedom to the large boats to navigate Hell Gate waters. It would also give opportunity to the State canal barges and other craft to go direct from the Hudson River by means of the new Spuyten Duyvil channel, down the Harlem, and out to Long Island Sound through the Bronx Kills, thereby saving great expense and also avoiding the danger of the long trip now necessary down the Hudson River, around the Battery, and then up the East River through Hell Gate to the Sound.

All of these improvements, it is pointed out, would encourage the establishment of new manufacturing industries in undeveloped waterfront areas, especially between 133th and 155th Streets. The Bronx Kills is a shallow waterway separating Randall's Island from the mainland and connecting the Harlem River with Long Island Sound. The Kills are barely 4,000 feet in length, and the depth varies from 12 to 20 feet. A Government report in 1903 recommended an 18-foot channel there, 300 feet wide, which was estimated to cost $1,899,480. Since that time the commerce of the East and Harlem Rivers has more than doubled, but no definite action has been taken, although frequently urged, by Congress to lessen the dangers of Hell Gate and add materially to the navigable and industrial growth of the Harlem River.

FIFTY-FOUR YEARS AGO.

FIFTY-FOUR years ago, on July 4, 1865, the anniversary of the Declaration of Independence was commemorated by the greatest peace celebration ever held up to that time in the United States. The civil war had ended early in April at Appomatox, soldiers were returning home, and, although the country had been shocked by the assassination of President Lincoln, the people were preparing, just as they are today, to return to peaceful pursuits and heal the wounds made by war.

The Fourth of July, 1865, was memorable in many respects. In the first place, throughout the North it was celebrated with more than usual enthusiasm and public demonstrations of joy. At Gettysburg thousands of veterans assembled to pay tribute to the brave men who had given their lives for the Union and lay the cornerstone of the Soldiers' Monument. New York City, in addition to a great variety of festive events, was honored early in the day by the arrival of General Grant, who was on his way to Albany to be a guest of Governor Fenton at the presentation of nearly 200 battle flags borne by this State's regiments in the war. In New York City the celebration began before daylight. Except for Central Park, where no fireworks were allowed, the smell of powder pervaded every section and firecrackers popped and banged in every street.

"Never before was there such a universal racket, such a tremendous rowde-dow, such a continuous discharge of firearms," said THE NEW YORK TIMES in its account of the day's activities. "Gangs of young men appeared upon the streets with pistols and small cannon. At every corner these intensely loyal chaps discharged their duty and their weapons of offense, deafening men, women, and children, scaring milkmen and starting horses, while a patient public endured it all and said not a word for their dear country's sake."

The celebration was officially opened by a salute of cannon on the Battery at sunrise. At noon patriotic chimes rang from Trinity Church. There was a parade of several thousand returned soldiers, including the famous Irish Brigade and the fighting 69th Regiment. The 7th Regiment was commanded by Colonel Emmons Clark, the 69th Regiment by Lieut. Col. James J. Smith, the 71st by Colonel Benjamin L. Trafford, and the 12th by Colonel W. C. Ward. After the parade the Irish Brigade was entertained at dinner in Irving Hall. In the evening there were displays of fireworks in parks and squares, except Central Park. The largest display was at City Hall Park.

How Americans Made It Possible for Starving Montenegrins to Stop Digging Graves and Begin Planting Food

ONE relief ship crushed in the ice off the coast of Finland; one food ship blown up by a runaway mine not swept up in the English Channel; one young American officer, distributing food in a pestilence stricken district, overtaken by smallpox and dead before help could reach him.

The reports in the files of the American Relief Administration are full of such statements. Behind each bald fact there is a story of heroism and devotion to the cause of suffering humanity. Especially every step in the work of feeding the struggling young nations who have thrown off the yoke of the Central Powers has had to be made in the face of great difficulties. Telephonic and telegraphic communications have been completely broken by the retreating enemy in many of the districts. Moreover, wherever the enemy went they left all systems of transportation demoralized because of the number of engines they stole and the miles of track they destroyed. To increase the handicaps of those trying to bring relief to the people and also to increase tenfold the suffering of the people, typhus, cholera, and tuberculosis are raging unchecked in many districts, owing to the long-continued malnutrition of the people, the unsanitary conditions in which the war has left their towns and cities, and the dearth of medical supplies to combat disease.

Out of this chaos the representatives of the American Relief Administration must bring order, open channels of communication, and start and keep a flow of food going to the helpless people within the ring of suffering.

Take, for instance, this fleeting glance of the work being done in the southern part of Jugoslavia—what used to be Montenegro. The report was written for Mr. Hoover by a young Lieutenant of the United States Army who volunteered his services for the seeming impossible task of getting food to these suffering people.

Unconquered Mountaineers.

"This is the one region of Montenegro," the report runs, "that never gave up to the Austrians. The hills were always filled with loyal troops, who frequently raided the occupying forces in the valley. In retaliation the Austrians carried off practically all of the cattle and food supplies. This, plus the fact that it was completely isolated because of the impassable mountains, whose trails have been blocked with snow during the Winter months, and because of the broken bridges on its one good road, has left this district on starvation rations since the last of November. Even last Fall many of the people were eating grass. For the last four months the death rate has been enormous.

"We found after investigation that the use of cableways over the broken bridges and up the steepest mountains was the quickest and most feasible way of transporting food to the isolated districts beyond.

"On the route from Podoritza to Kolachij, for instance, we put up a cable over the blownup bridge that used to span the foaming, swift-running river that runs between the mountains here. With this we were able to swing our loads of food over to the other side. Here we packed the food on burros for the perilous haul over five miles of mountain trails winding in and out on the edge of the cliffs. Then they were swung on a second cable over a second broken bridge spanning a deep chasm and from there the food could be taken by horse and cart to Kolachij. The entire distance of this route is but fifty miles, but the many different hauls necessary even in this short distance gives some idea of our transportation problem here."

From another part of Jugoslavia comes the following report: "The spectre of hunger has at last been removed in this district, even though a mountain wall of 5,000 feet shut it from the outside world, and for a long time this region seemed doomed. We have succeeded at last, however, in establishing cableways up to the tops of the mountains. Here we collect all the burros and pack horses we can scrape together to take the food down to the valley towns on the other side of the mountain.

Waiting for Our Food.

"You should see how anxiously, but trustingly," the report goes on to say, "the people down in the valley wait for our American food to arrive. When we first entered this region it was the latter part of the Winter, and the people had given up all hope of being saved. 'It is no use,' they told us when we arrived, 'you can't save us; we haven't enough provisions to hold out until Spring, and even if there is American food to be had you can't get it to us. The Germans have torn up all railroads and bridges leading to the seaboard. But even if you could get the food to the mountains you couldn't get it over to us, because all the mountain trails are impassable for hauling this time of year. No, you can't save us,' they kept repeating.

"'Yes, we can,' we replied, and, planting the American flag on one of their little churches as a symbol of hope to keep up their courage, we went back over the mountains and began to open up the channels of communication with the seaboard by means of horses and cables, as already described. The hardest part of the haul was of course over the mountains themselves. Here we never dared to send off a train of our pack horses carrying the precious food without sending with them a crew of men to shovel them out of the drifts. Many times the trails had to be shoveled foot by foot as the pack horses proceeded. The discouraging part of it was that when the wind was high the trails almost immediately filled up again, so that a few minutes after one had been shoveled it would be lost beneath the drifts. By the end of March, however, the snow melted sufficiently so that this difficulty was removed.

"Anyhow, we kept our word," this report ends. "What they said couldn't be done, we said could. And we did it! The people in this district are now happily eating American flour and pork. They have stopped digging graves and are, instead, planting their crops for this year's harvest."

In this one sentence lies the whole purpose of the American Relief Administration. This organization, under the generalship of Mr. Hoover, has been sending food to the war-ravaged new countries so that they can stop digging graves and, instead, cultivate their fields and so support themselves. The plan of the American Relief Administration has been to tide these new countries over the crucial period in which the war left them and send them American food until they can stand on their own feet.

This time is now near at hand. In a few weeks their own harvests will begin to come in. On June 30, therefore, the last ships to carry a food cargo under the auspices of the American Relief Administration to the populace of Jugoslavia, Czechoslovakia, Rumania, Finland, or any other of the recently liberated nations will leave American ports.

However, special foods for children, like cocoa, condensed milk, and sugar, will continue to be sent to Europe in order that the Children's Bureaus in each of the recently liberated countries can continue to give free school meals to the children and so bring them back to their normal state of health.

OFFICERS FOR RECONSTRUCTION

UNDER the direction of Colonel Arthur Woods, assistant to the Secretary of War, a field force composed almost entirely of second lieutenants has been organized to go through the United States, canvassing labor conditions and opportunities of employment for ex-service men. Their mission is to help in the colossal work of reabsorbing into our industrial life the 200,000 to 300,000 men who are released every month from the military service of the United States.

MANY MOTOR DELIGHTS IN ADIRONDACK TOUR

Lakes and Mountains Offer Wide Variety of Scenic Attractions—Roads Very Good to the Popular Resorts

Evidences that the war is over and that motor car owners are preparing to do more extensive touring this Summer than during the last year or two have been clearly shown in the unusually large number of requests for routes and general road information received at the Automobile Club of America within the last few days. These requests indicate that the Adirondack region will be one of the most popular motor touring sections this season. More routes have already been mapped out for members and others than were prepared for the entire Summer a year ago by the touring bureau staff of the club. As a result of these heavy inquiries the chief roadman of the club made a few inspection trips through the Adirondacks a few days ago and he reports that motoring conditions are particularly good, although many dirt roads will be encountered.

The gateway to the Adirondacks from the southeast is from Albany, Troy, and Schenectady. From Albany a hard-surfaced road runs due north through Lathams, Waterford, and Mechanicsville to Saratoga, and also a good connection from Troy to Waterford. The route via Schenectady is not advisable at present, the road being closed between Schenectady and Ballston Spa, and the detour is poor.

From Saratoga to Lake George there are two hard-surfaced roads, one being via Lake Luzerne and the other via Glens Falls. The Luzerne route is very scenic but rather hilly, with many bad curves. The Glens Falls route is the more direct, with a trifle better road surface. There is a good motor road from Lake George to Bolton Landing, but from there on it is impassable. Many motorists place their cars on board the boat at Bolton Landing and take it off at Sabbath Day Point, running from there to Silver Bay, Hague, and Baldwin to Ticonderoga. This is not recommended for a pleasure trip, as travel is over a hilly and poor dirt road.

From Ticonderoga running along Lake Champlain through Port Henry to Westport, the hard-surfaced road is in fair condition. The trunk line from Lake George through Warrensburg, Chester, Schroon Lake, and Elizabethtown is hard-surfaced. From Chestertown, along the shore of Brent Lake to a short distance beyond Graphite, there is hard-surfaced road, but, beyond, the famous Tongue Mountain is encountered, which is dangerous and practically impassable.

From Chestertown there is a hard-surfaced road through Weavertown, North Creek, and Aldenlair, passing Harris Lake and Rich Lake to Long Lake. There is a connection beyond Aldenlair through Tahawus to the Tahawus Club, at the north end of Sanford Lake. From Long Lake motorists can reach the north end of Raquette Lake by turning south at Long Lake and going through Deerland. The car can be put on board a scow and towed through Raquette Lake. There are good hotels at Long Lake.

A dirt road which is narrow, but passable, will be found from North Creek to Indian Lake, thence on through Blue Mountain Lake to Long Lake. From Long Lake there is a fair dirt road, in dry weather, passing Clear Pond to Little Tupper Lake. From Little Tupper through Moody, along Tupper Lake, to the town of Tupper Lake, a hard-surfaced road will be found, except about four miles of unfinished road which was graded and then abandoned by the contractors. The run from Long Lake to Tupper Lake is very interesting, passing numerous camps and through the Whitney Game Preserve where many deer may usually be seen crossing the road.

A hard-surfaced road leads by many small lakes, along Upper Saranac Lake to Saranac Junction, where a connection can be made on a dirt road along Clear Lake, Upper St. Regis and Lower St. Regis to Paul Smith's. To reach Paul Smith's from Saranac Junction the preferable way is to go through Harrietstown and Gabriels on hard-surfaced road. A hard-surfaced road is also found between Saranac Junction and Saranac Lake, and there is good connection on a hard road from Saranac Lake to Loon Lake.

The road is hard-surfaced and in good condition from Saranac Lake through Lake Placid, along the west branch of the Ausable River through Wilmington Notch, connecting with the north and south trunk lines at Jay, and on through Ausable Forks to Keeseville.

From Keeseville to Plattsburg there are two good hard-surfaced roads, one via Peru and South Plattsburg and the other via Ausable Chasm and Bluff Point. The latter is the better of the two. From Schroon Lake to Ticonderoga there is a hard-surfaced road passing Paradox Lake to Paradox, but from there on it is narrow. From Plattsburg north to Rouse's Point, and then on to Montreal, motorists will have a hard-surfaced road.

Between Elizabethtown and Westport the road is a fair dirt one.

To reach Pleasant, Sacandaga, and Piseco Lakes, there is a good hard-surfaced road from Fonda north to Gloversville, thence on through Sacandaga and Hope to Wells. From there on through Alvord to Speculator is a dirt road, with a hard-surfaced road from Speculator to Piseco.

Hard-surfaced roads will be found in touring from the Mohawk Valley at Little Falls through Middleville and Poland to Alder Creek; also from Herkimer to Middleville and Utica, through Remsen to Alder Creek. From Alder Creek there is a good hard-surface road passing White Lake, Otter Lake, and Nelson Lake to Fulton Chain and Old Forge. From there on there is a dirt road along First, Second, Third, and Fourth Lakes to Eagle Bay.

Ferry Routes for Motorists.

Ferry information which may be of interest to motorists is announced by the American Automobile Association. The former Rye-Sea Cliff ferry is now running from Rye to Oyster Bay, boats leaving both terminals on the hour between 9 A. M. and 8 P. M. The New Rochelle-Sea Cliff ferry will operate boats every 2½ hours between 9 A. M. and 7 P. M. from New Rochelle and one hour later from Sea Cliff. In addition to the old ferry between Bridgeport and Port Jefferson, making two trips a day, a new ferry was started last week, giving three daily trips from Bridgeport at 8 A. M., 12 o'clock and 4:15 P. M., and leaving Port Jefferson at 10 A. M., 2 and 6 P. M.

ADVOCATES TRAILER USE.

Uniform Legislation Needed — Offers Cheaper Transport Rates.

An effort to secure a reasonable uniformity in the State laws regulating the registration and use of trailers is being made by the Trailer Manufacturers' Association of America, which recently opened offices in this city. Recommendations for legislation have been drawn up and submitted to the committee in Washington which drew up the proposed uniform traffic act.

The allowable weight per inch width of tire for trailers should be greater than for self-propelled vehicles, in the opinion of the manufacturers, because trailer wheels are free from rolling and do not have the destructive effect of driving wheels on road surfaces. Wear of the tire is in direct proportion to wear of the road. Therefore, if 800 pounds per inch width of tire is allowed for motor trucks, 1,000 pounds per inch might properly be allowed for trailer tires.

It is held to be to the interest of industry and commerce to encourage trailer use. Cheaper highway transportation offers the only possible means of materially increasing the returns to the producer and lowering prices to the consumer. By improvement of the highways and the use of motor trucks and trailers the cost of haulage may be materially reduced.

BELFAST PLANT FOR FORD.

Former Naval Aircraft Factory for Fordson Tractor.

According to The Field of London the big military and naval aerodromes and aircraft factory built on the outskirts of Belfast has been or is being acquired for the production of the Fordson agricultural tractor by Henry Ford and his son, who appear, it is added, to have cut away from the Ford car concern.

"So far as we can gather," says the correspondent, "the Belfast affair is planned on a grand scale, and as Sir Percival Perry has resigned from the Ford service to handle the Fordson project, we may anticipate some rapid developments. He informs us that the Fordson Company will be 100 per cent. British, which we take to mean that there will be no American interests in its management or capital."

Good Booklet for Motorists.

The 1919 edition of the New York State motor vehicle law has just been issued in booklet form from the office of Secretary of State Hugo at Albany. It contains not only all the recent amendments to the law, but also gives the reciprocal touring periods between New York and other States. There is also a list of lenses and light controlling devices which have been approved up to June 1, with the maximum permissible candle power for each. Copies may be obtained on request and without charge.

ROAD RULES FOR WOMEN.

Detroit Motorist Calls the Gossipy One a Menace to Traffic.

A Detroit woman, Mrs. Joseph Metzger, who recently proved to the police authorities that she could operate a motor car in congested streets as readily as a man, has submitted some rules to the Police Commissioner of that city for the benefit of women drivers. They are all based on common-sense principles. Here are two which are especially apt:

"Do not expect other car drivers to give you the right of way out of courtesy because you are a woman. Every car driver is on an equal plane in the streets.

"Don't talk to other persons riding with you while you are driving. Many a woman has figured in a motor smash-up because she did not keep her mind on her driving. The gossipy woman driver is a menace to traffic."

Swinehart Tires

This Man Knows Why they Wear —and Wear —and Wear

The Tire Without a Single Government Rejection

It takes a great tire to make such a record.

And the SWINEHART Ideal Cellular Truck Tire is a great tire. Great because of its construction and the cells that are built into it.

Cells that make it semi-pneumatic, producing a much more resilient tire.

Cells that make it anti-skid and give better traction.

Cells that cool the tire and reduce internal friction.

The angle, depth and width of the cells or holes in this remarkable tire are scientifically correct. This construction makes the tire sufficiently resilient to render the use of pneumatic truck tires superfluous. It does away with blowouts and punctures and the consequent dangers resulting from them. No spare tire to carry because the Swinehart Ideal Cellular will outwear the truck.

This Cellular feature is exclusive in Swinehart Tires—it is patented.

The quality of materials and the workmanship are the highest—they are SWINEHART.

Swinehart Pneumatic Tires

Made in both Fabric and Cord—both give more guaranteed miles for your money than you would ever expect, or even have a right to expect. Let your next tires be Swinehart, or see that the truck or car you buy is equipped with them.

DIVIDES MOTOR DRIVERS INTO THREE CLASSES

Good, Indifferent, and Bad, Says English Expert—The Last Type Represents Ignorance and Selfishness

Automobile drivers have developed all sorts of characteristics, but it has remained for an English motorist, writing in The London Daily Mail, to make a psychological study of the class. His conclusion is that drivers may be divided, somewhat on the plan of early Gaul, into three parts—good, indifferent, and bad. He defines these classes with a clearness that indicates wide experience on the road. Every motorist doubtless has something to learn, and it may be instructive as well as entertaining to see how the British critic defines the peculiarities of each type.

The good driver is a born driver; he possesses the "it" which cannot be acquired but which is almost an extra sense. He has by nature a keen sense of sound, so that he knows the song of his engine and of his car, and the slightest variation will strike him at once. His eye for the judgment of relative distances is as near perfect as can be. He never makes a mistake in traffic with regard to selecting a gap.

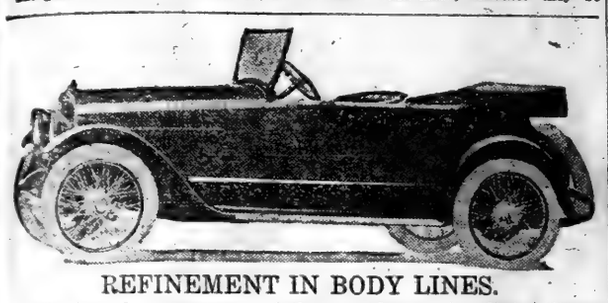
The brakes are hardly touched and all the work is smooth. To him it is quite unnecessary to run up to a block, apply the brake hard, then to change down and to take the gap with fierce acceleration. The good driver sees the block and, judging when the road will be free, eases off the power and arrives when the gap occurs, without the brake being used, without a change of speed being required, and with quiet, smooth acceleration he passes through. He has lost no time and treated both his car and his passengers with consideration.

The other sense which is well developed is that of touch. It is no trouble to him to start the car from rest with a gliding motion instead of a jerk, to pull up in case of an emergency quickly but without excessive jar or skid, or to restart the car from a standstill on a steep upgrade, accelerating the engine just sufficiently to take up the load smoothly, while the moment he feels the clutch beginning to engage off come the side brakes. There is no spinning of the back wheels, no running backward of the car, and no excessive load put upon the crank-shaft. In appearance it is all very simple, easy, and "finished."

The indifferent class comprises those who drive safely but without genuine sympathy and without finesse. They will never make any glaring error but they will never do anything really well. True economy in driving, resulting from such things as proper spark control, good cornering, and right timing of gear changes, will not be theirs.

And lastly comes the bad driver. Today his name is legion, and he is selfishness and ignorance personified. He thinks he knows all, yet he is brutal to his machine, over-driving the engine downhill, flogging it uphill, speeding over the pot-holed surface, and caring naught for the feelings or safety of other road-users, whether they be fellow-motorists, horse drivers, or foot passengers.

A danger to all, for he is just the type who does the wrong thing in an emergency because he lacks imagination, he wears out the roads and every machine he touches in an incredibly short space of time. It is not difficult to realize that, if this class of driver is allowed to represent the majority in this country, motoring will become more costly and less popular.



REFINEMENT IN BODY LINES.

The long, low appearance of the new Haynes six-cylinder "Fourdore" roadster indicates touring dependability.

ALLOT ROAD MATERIAL.

States Will Get Many Tractors for Highway Work.

At the request of the Department of Agriculture, the War Department has ordered to be returned from France as soon as possible a large quantity of engineering equipment to be distributed by the Department of Agriculture, through the Bureau of Public Roads, to the States for use in the construction and maintenance of Federal aid highways. The equipment will be distributed without charge.

The material includes about 1,300 caterpillar tractors, about 400 road rollers, steam and gas driven, and a large number of concrete mixers, road graders, elevating graders, rock crushers, industrial locomotives, dump cars, steam shovels, hoisting engines, and electric motors.

The equipment will be apportioned on the basis of the allotments in the same way that 20,000 army motor trucks are now being distributed.

STRENGTH IN CHASSIS FRAME.

Motor Route to Trenton.

The route most generally favored at this time between New York and Trenton, according to the Bureau of Tours of the Automobile Club of America, is that via Newark, New Brunswick, and Hights town, on which the road surface averages fairly good. The Lincoln Highway, between New Brunswick and Princeton, is under construction and therefore should be avoided. The section between Metuchen and Rahway, which has been notorious for its fluctuating condition, is now being rebuilt, and when completed, several dangerous curves will be eliminated, as will the grade crossing at Iselin Station and under the pass just beyond. In short, the new road will parallel the Pennsylvania Railroad tracks. For the time being the old road has been put in fair condition.

New York's 1920 Auto Plates.

The 1920 automobile plates for New York State will be in green and black, the background being a light pea green and the numerals being black, with the hyphenated effect. They will be the same size as this year's plates, but with slight changes which will prevent imitations on the part of unscrupulous motorists.

AMERICAN AIRPLANES IN LATIN COUNTRIES

South American republics are realizing the commercial possibilities of the airplane and are recognizing that the aircraft industry in the United States is producing better types of airplanes than those made by European builders and used in those countries, according to information compiled by Ernesto Montenegro for the Manufacturers' Aircraft Association. Several countries below the equator are making plans for inaugurating aerial service between the large cities, while military and naval aviation is being seriously considered by several Governments.

Mr. Montenegro attributes the interest of the South American republics in American types of airplanes chiefly to the war, which, he says, cut them off for a long period from European markets. On this point he says:

"They were compelled to buy in the American market. That they had not done so before was due to no fault of theirs, but to the mistaken policy of some North American business interests in trying to make the people who live on the other side of the equator buy the goods on terms fixed by them and not as they had been accustomed to do for centuries."

"A mutual understanding of each other's business methods grew out of the war, and as a result the Latin American has cultivated a high regard for the United States, he writes. Mr. Montenegro says that several countries have purchased war types of planes and recognized their value.

Mr. Montenegro points out that several months ago the Brazilian Government requested the United States to detail two aviators to aid in instructing Brazilian young men in the science of flying. Lieutenant O. B. James and Lieutenant P. A. Cusacks were sent by the Navy Department, and Brazil has appropriated $500,000 for aviation and is in the market for American-made planes.

The Chilean Government has made plans for aerial lines and has established two naval air stations at Quintéros, near Valparaiso, and Talchinao. Chile also has an army aviation school and is using the airplane in its Weather Bureau. Chilean aviators recently flew from Santiago, Chile, to Mendoza, Argentina, and the incident attracted great notice among the South Americans.

Peru offers a fertile field for American manufacturers, and they are urged to take advantage of it before foreign concerns reap the benefit. Under the auspices of the engineering branch of the army, an aviation school has been started in Peru.

Summarizing the situation, Mr. Montenegro warns the American manufacturers that English, French, and Italian builders of aircraft are making bids for this trade, and cautions them to adopt business methods satisfactory to retain good-will in South American trade.

TO PROTECT MOTORISTS

An organization which aims primarily by education and moral suasion to make the streets safer for all and to drive the persistently reckless motorist from the highways has just been incorporated at Albany. It is known as the League for Motorists' Protection. The methods of the league have been approved by Secretary of State Francis M. Hugo, and if consistently carried out a great deal of good may be accomplished along the necessary lines of greater safety and reduction in accidents.

At the head of the organization is Harry W. Gaston, a well-known New York motorist. James V. Boise, manager of the Chatham and Phenix branch bank at Broadway and Sixty-first Street, is Treasurer. Temporary offices have been taken at 16 West Sixty-first Street.

There will be an annual membership fee, said Mr. Gaston yesterday, of $4. Each member will receive two emblems, both alike, one to be carried in front and the other at the rear of his automobile. This emblem has been named "The Red Badge of Caution," and it will state that the member observes caution and demands caution from others. The emblems have been copyrighted by the league, and will be licensed to members on the understanding that the license will be revoked if a member is convicted of the more flagrant violations of the traffic laws. It is felt that this will restrain the member from acts of recklessness and at the same time the realization that each member will be pledged to report any infraction of the traffic laws to the league will exert a restraint upon taxi cab drivers, truck chauffeurs, and others who are not members.

"There have been various organizations formed in the past for the purpose of furnishing good roads information, maps, &c., enabling the members to buy insurance and accessories at cut rates, and offering to do everything for the motorists except giving them a periodical bath," explained Mr. Gaston. "The League for Motorists' Protection is a nonprofit organization, designed to do one thing, and that is to drive the Hun from the road so that our wives, mothers, and sisters may operate their motor cars without the fear that road autocrats will bring them to grief.

"The league will also have for its purpose the elimination of the professional witness and the ambulance chaser, and the correction of many other evils that exist. No officer will receive a salary, and the league will not engage in any business or seek to promote the business of others. It is strictly a body organized for the purpose of affording protection on the highways through the more efficient enforcement of existing laws by co-operation with the accredited authorities."

Seeks Federal Road Act Changes.

The Directors of the American Automobile Association have resolved to ask Congress to amend the Federal Aid Road act in such manner that the joint Federal and State money shall only be expended upon roads which are included in well-defined State highway systems. It will be set forth that the Secretary of Agriculture should be empowered, in passing upon the projects submitted by the several State Highway Departments, whenever in his judgment both intrastate and interstate needs can best be served, to decide that the Federal apportionment of cost can be increased to 75 per cent., instead of the present half-and-half plan. The association strongly indorsed the Townsend bill calling for a Federal highway system and a Federal commission.

AIR-SMUGGLING PROBLEM.

Raises Difficult International Question, Says English Aviator.

One of the most difficult international problems of the air at the present time, according to an English aviator, is how to prevent smuggling and other illicit practices to which the airplane lends itself with considerable facility. The plan at present devised by those in charge of civil aviation, is to confine all departures to and arrivals from foreign countries to four selected aerodromes, at which the customs authorities will be stationed. That appears, it is said, more designed to enable the regular inspection of incoming and outgoing traffic to be carried out with dispatch than to defeat the determined smuggler.

"It will be easy," adds the aviator, "to invent a pretext for violating any regulation framed to compel a private aviator to land where his machine can be overhauled by customs officials. Possibly when aircraft become as certain of their course and are as reliably navigable as steamships, subterfuges can be ruthlessly suppressed, but unless a very numerous coastguard service is maintained, supplemented by aerial patrols, a large amount of promiscuous, if rather petty, smuggling in such commodities as tobacco, saccharine, perfumes, and spirits probably will exist now that we appear to be in for an era of fiscal taxation certain to be high in the cases indicated. Other practices which will be violations of our existing laws, such as surreptitious conveyance of correspondence, assisting criminals or misdemeanants to leave the country, and even the practice of burglary are not improbable, and so we may expect that, as time passes, restrictions on private aviation will tend to increase in various directions."

STUDY MOTOR TRAFFIC.

Highways Committee Reorganized to Tackle New Problems.

An important reorganization of the Highways Transport Committee has been announced by Grosvenor B. Clarkson, Director of the Council of National Defense. Organized originally to expedite the overland transport of army motor trucks with war munitions, the Highways Transport Committee will now direct its attention to a careful study of the many problems growing out of the entrance of the motor truck into the commercial transportation field, with a view to determine how the motor truck can best be fitted into the nation's transportation agencies.

It will be the policy of the council, through its committee, to co-operate with all transportation agencies to ascertain how the transportation needs can be served most efficiently, speedily and economically, and to aid in the promotion of motor express lines through rural communities. It will co-operate with the United States Railroad Administration in the study of the short-haul problem, and will give special attention to the relation of the rural motor express to interurban electric lines and waterways traffic.

For this broader field the Highways Transport Committee will include representatives from the Office of Public Roads and Rural Engineering of the Department of Agriculture, the Bureau of Markets of the same department, the Post Office Department, and the Department of Commerce.

The committee, as reorganized, consists of John S. Cravens of the Council of National Defense, Chairman; James I. Blakslee, Fourth Assistant Postmaster General; J. M. Goodell, consulting engineer, Office of Public Roads; James H. Collins, Investigator in Market Survey, Bureau of Markets; R. S. MacElwee, Second Assistant Chief, Bureau Foreign and Domestic Commerce; Charles W. Reid, Executive Secretary; Grosvenor B. Clarkson, Director of the Council, ex officio.

The committee will be assisted by the Highways Transport Committee Advisory Board, consisting of William Phelps Eno of Washington, Professor Arthur H. Blanchard of New York, C. A. Musselman of Philadelphia, Raymond Beck of Akron, Ohio, and John T. Stockton of Chicago.

Like an Alarm Clock

Here it is

YOU can pin your faith to the "Automatic Pressure Regulator." With it on your tires, there's never a chance of over-inflating—which causes blowouts and give-outs.

Simply set it for the right amount of air. Turn on the supply. After a bit a cheery little whistle announces "enough."

That's saving time for you. And it's sure saving, too. The "Automatic Pressure Regulator" lengthens the life of a tire by from 60% to 75% and it saves gasoline, because the tires are evenly inflated.

How does that strike you? Mighty good thing to have, isn't it? Let your dealer show you the "Automatic Pressure Regulator." See how it saves its own cost many times over. Then put them on your car—and ride content. $4.00 per set of four.

If your dealer cannot supply you, we will. Dealers, ask your jobbers.

Use O-Cedar Polish the O-Cedar Polish Way

First, remove mud, dust, etc., from your car by washing with water in the usual way.

If you have used oils, or wax, it is best to use Ivory Soap to remove them.

Pour about 4 ounces of O-Cedar in a pan and add a quart of warm water. Saturate a clean cloth in this and go over the body of the car. Do not attempt to clean too much at a time—take one side of the body or a fender first. Follow by rubbing with a dry cloth. But little rubbing is required to produce a hard, dry, lasting lustre.

DEAR JIM:

Did you ever have a car and then not have it? Listen: I stepped into Schoonmaker & Jacod's to look over a car. Saw a humdinger—a real spanking "beaut," trim as a cutter and as slick as a cup-winner. Schoonmaker & Jacod gave me its history—explained how their Service Engineers overhauled each car and put it in A-1 condition.

Two days slipped by while I enjoyed thinking of that car. Well, you know the story—somebody grabbed the car. Sore! Luckily Schoonmaker & Jacod rescued the running mate—they bought the same type for me—overhauled it and I—well, I made up my mind quick. Yours at once,

JACK.

Un-retouched photograph showing motor trucks of the delivery fleet of Bauman & Company, New York City, which is entirely equipped with Goodyear Solid Tires

There's a Goodyear on Every Wheel of the Bauman & Co. Fleet

"We tested different makes of truck tires in our regular 7-day-a-week delivery work. As a result we chose Goodyear Solids. We find we can count on at least one year's service from every Goodyear. The frequent inspections of a nearby Goodyear Truck Tire Service Station have helped us to get the mileage out of these tires, instead of wasting some of it."—Frank Linden, Supervisor of Motor Trucks, Bauman & Company, Furniture and Carpets, New York City

TODAY you will find every motor truck owned by Bauman & Company, of this city, equipped completely with Goodyear Solid Tires.

This entire adoption of Goodyears has followed a long test period, during which officials of the furniture and carpet house used different makes of truck tires and noted their wearing qualities carefully.

They state that the powerful Goodyear Solid Tires have given them uniformly higher mileages in hard daily service—always averaging over 12,000 miles even where abused.

They point particularly to the Goodyear Solid Tires used on their heaviest trucks, for these have always averaged better than 20,000 miles—one delivering, thus far, 31,500.

Yet even these impressive observations do not tell the whole story of this tire economy since the excellent results are partly attributed to the tire-conservation service of a nearby Goodyear Truck Tire Service Station.

It is the combination of Goodyear Truck Tires plus direct, prompt Goodyear Service which is at the bottom of the many big money-savings reported by such truck owners.

In total it means this: (1) securing the type and size of Goodyear Truck Tires that fit your hauling conditions exactly—either the solid, cushion or pneumatic; (2) getting out of these tires all the mileage Goodyear has built into them.

The list of stations below indicates the convenience with which you can avail yourself of this complete truck tire service—a continuous service.

BRITISH LABOR HOPES TO RULE

Woman Leader Tells of Triple Organization Toward Bloodless Revolution

WHEN Frank A. Vanderlip, on his recent return from Europe, said that England had narrowly escaped a revolution during the labor troubles of last Winter, none of his startling assertions aroused so much attention as this in the United States.

Miss Margaret Bondfield—in this country as the representative of the National Federation of Women Workers of England, considered one of the foremost labor leaders of that country—now says that the revolution there has already begun and that forces the strength of which is not recognized outside of Great Britain are already organized and need but to be extended to bring about, in an orderly manner, fundamental changes which would put the workers in possession of the Government and the industries. First, she expects a labor Parliament within a few years; "but that," she adds, "would only be a beginning."

"The labor movement in England is organized in three branches, distinct yet working together," said Miss Bondfield in Washington the other day when asked what the forces she referred to were. "It is unlike anything you have in this country, and I am here in the hope that something similar will be undertaken by the workers of the United States, for we have national as well as international aims. You have the beginnings of the movement, but they are not developed as they are in England. The worker in England is organized from three main aspects or functions: first, as a producer in the labor union; second, as a consumer in the co-operative union, and third, as a citizen in the Labor Party.

British Labor's Trinity.

"It is, you see, a trinity, three in one, but each keeps to the separate field of activity. There is no supreme authority over all; unity and harmony of action is obtained by joint committees, which meet for the consideration of policies that apply to all. Thus these forces are brought to bear on every question of importance that arises on any one of the three sides of the problem.

"Take the trade union first. We have 4,500,000 members and are now making plans to increase their strength by the amalgamation of large groups. A committee of twelve from the Trade Union Congress is at work on a scheme to incorporate in a new plan the advantages of the form of both the industrial union and the craft union, with some eliminations from the craft form, which hitherto has been the accepted one. The new plan will aim at industrial grouping, all the unions in one particular industry linked. This will include unskilled, as well as skilled, workers, every one, for example, in a mine, even the donkey boy and the girl at the pit brow. In the craft form the organization has been through the industries, in clearly defined craft groups. Wage claims were put in separately, by one craft at a time. Under the new form we expect to put in wage claims as a whole, for the industry concerned.

"For instance, in the textiles the spinners would put in a wage claim; then, a month after, the weavers would ask the employers for a raise, with the danger of bringing on an industrial crisis and holding up the whole industry to the disadvantage of both the employers and the employes. We will still have craft groupings, for we want to preserve all the fine standards of workmanship, but the policies will be along the broad lines of the industrial group.

"On the question of pay the general feeling in our country is that the stability of workers depends on how far we can get in obtaining a decent standard for the men at the bottom. That standard must be not only one that will provide the actual necessities of food and clothing and shelter, but one that will make guarantees for recreation and against sickness. You can see how low some of these are now when it is known that the Board of Trade this week voted for only 28 or 30 shillings a week for some classes of workers. Before the war the Rowntree standards were 21 shillings a week, and the purchasing power of money has sunk so since that what a shilling will buy is cut in half. We must have better conditions, and strong labor unions were never so imperative as they are now.

Work of Co-operatives.

"But there is another way of bringing about the changes we aim at—the co-operative movement, which has now reached an extent that it caters to about one-third of our population, though the actual shareholders number much less. The Co-operative Union does a wholesale and retail business and is also reaching out for the source of supplies, the raw material. We have a large staff of lecturers abroad in England to increase the already great body of co-operators, and we expect to control prices by becoming the largest purchasers, and that very soon. We are already strong enough to control the price of tea, because we are the biggest buyers; we own not only ships for bringing the tea to England, but also tea plantations. We are not yet in control of flour, but advancing toward it."

"Have you reduced the price of tea?" we asked.

"We have kept it from going higher," was the answer, "just as during the war when the Government fixed the price of the loaf of bread at nine pence we continued to sell ours at eight, and on account of the public need then permitted the poor who were not members of the Co-operative to buy of us. But our policy is to sell at the market price; the gain to our consumers comes in through the distribution to them of the profits. The shareholders get nothing; their investment is for the purpose of participating in the benefits of the Co-operative.

"Through the extension of this movement, along with the others, we expect to get control of England. We want to get back of merchandising to the control of raw materials, so that anything not owned by the Government will be owned by the people through the Co-operative. Some places in England are now wholly co-operative. In Long Buckby, a place of 2,500 inhabitants, they are all co-operators, not only for the necessities of life, but for recreation also. They have a co-operative theatre and cinema. In Barrow, a shipbuilding centre, there is one huge Co-operative store, occupying a block, where practically all the shipbuilders and other workers do their buying.

"There is another advantage to society derived from the Co-operative; it develops the member's capacities; he becomes a part of a great business and there is aroused and developed a consciousness that his consent as to what he shall pay and how he shall be served is a factor of importance.

Political Ambitions.

"Besides the producing and the consuming function there is the political side, and we come to the Labor Party. The difference between the labor union and the Labor Party is that the Labor Party represents the interest of labor as a whole, not trade questions, but questions affecting the country as a whole—education, the industries, how to get close to our own Government, Ireland, Scotland. There is a tremendous movement for home rule in Scotland and Egypt, and for intervention in Russia."

"Where will private enterprise be under the proposed plan?"

"We expect to eliminate private profit as an incentive to effort. Through the Co-operative and the Government we will absorb all private profit. The capitalist and the profiteer will be eliminated. It is a mistake to think you can't get the best out of a man without the reward of money. We are doing it now in England. The Directors of the Co-operative receive annually $5,000 of your money, and the work itself, the opportunity of striving for the benefit of a great number of fellow beings, is attracting some of the smartest men in England. The business is an immense one to handle and affords room for the exercise of the highest ability."

"In your England of the future, do you foresee the highest ability as content with $5,000 a year?"

"Five thousand dollars is no big catch, but it is security. But what we expect—in fact already see with us—is that the appeal to effort will change. There will be a change in the psychology of the thing—a sense of reward from the satisfaction of rendering service—equality of income and with security for all, the brain released to soar for the service of man. It will be a recoil from the beastliness of the money view of society. It is coming. Unless the reactionary forces try to stem the tide we can have the revolution without violence. We want no smashing up of things because we cannot go too fast; we must take the rank and file with us.

Seek Peaceful Method.

"There is a small group in England that wants to smash things up, but most of us think that isn't the right way nor even the quickest way. The revolution has already begun; it only has to continue. Before the war we wondered how we would ever get rid of the big estates in England—that seemed a chief problem. Now they are being broken up, sold by the owners on account of taxation; in other ways taxation will be the leveler."

"What will the Government and the Co-operative own, separately, according to your plan?"

"The Government will own the land, minerals, the railroads and other transportation utilities and national resources of this kind, while food, clothing and the like will be developed through the Co-operative.

"Each of these branches is now making a strong advance. The teachers are joining the trade unions in great numbers, and we are also receiving great help by additions from the actors and actresses. The movement to join the union is fairly sweeping through the stage world. In the Co-operative banking is rising to higher importance. That received its impetus, characteristically, out of a strike. It was a miners' strike. The trade union money and the mine employers' money were deposited in the bank. The bank refused to advance the strikers their money promptly, with the purpose, it was charged, of helping the employers. The strikers turned to the Co-operative; the money was advanced on the pledge of the men. Later the trade union money was withdrawn from the bank and deposited in the Co-operative. Now $40,000 a week is being deposited in the Co-operative banks.

"There is one other important link. Each of these branches has an international connection. The co-operative movement now has international connections in France, Italy, the Netherlands, Norway, Sweden, and other European countries. The political movement is linked up with France, Italy and other European countries. Labor unions have long had international organizations."

Miss Bondfield came to this country as a delegate to the annual meeting of the American Federation of Labor. She is a member of the recently appointed Joint Industrial Council of Great Britain, composed of 400 representatives of the employers and 400 representatives of the workers, to devise a plan for the harmonious conduct of the industries of Great Britain.

A DESOLATING PORTENT

At the conclusion of a long letter to The London Times, urging that Oxford stand as a last stronghold of Greek in English universities, Gilbert Murray bewails the attitude of American institutions of learning toward the "classics." Part of the letter follows:

A FEW months ago a strange and desolating portent occurred. All the American universities at one blow abolished Latin as a necessary subject for the Arts degree. Presumably Latin will soon be as moribund as Greek in America. What I criticise is not the decision of this or that university; I quite think there should be some universities which do not require Latin for an Arts degree, just as I think there should be some which do not require mathematics. What I do criticise, what I think utterly and abysmally deplorable, is that all universities should do the same.

In England the fact that Cambridge no longer requires Greek in the Little-Go has removed the last fragment of "hardship" in requiring Greek for the basis of the literary courses in Oxford. The Greekless linguist or historian always had a large number of fairly good universities open to him, but he had some faint ground for complaint if he was excluded from the two universities which had the greatest prestige. Now that complaint no longer holds. For it cannot be argued that it is a hardship on a man that he should have to go to Cambridge rather than Oxford if he deliberately prefers the Cambridge system of education.

As to speculations about the effect of the abolition or retention of Greek on the numbers of undergraduates, I will only say first that as to numbers, Oxford is at present absolutely bursting with students, and has to reject large numbers of applications for want of room; and, secondly, that, speculation against speculation, it seems to me probable that if there is one university, and only one, which preserves the classical basis as a normal requirement for literary education, and thus maintains—in this particular respect—a peculiarly high and severe standard for its honor schools, the number of students desiring that form of university education will easily suffice to fill and to overflow it. Yours obediently,

GILBERT MURRAY.

A vacuum bottle that will not break

It is made of steel and is the only guaranteed vacuum bottle

OFF for a picnic!
Out for a day in the woods!

That's when your steaming hot coffee—your iced lemonade—depends on a vacuum bottle.

Perhaps you have experienced the annoyance and expense of broken glass vacuum bottles.

To-day you can buy a vacuum bottle which will never break under any conditions, and which will keep liquids hot or cold.

It is the Stanley Vacuum Bottle, built of steel and lined with unbreakable blue Amalite.

Its initial cost is naturally a little higher than that of the glass vacuum bottle, but in the end it is the cheapest, for there are no glass containers to buy.

Buy a Stanley Ferrostat Vacuum Bottle, sold in all of the better stores, and have the satisfaction of using the only vacuum bottle that will not break.

Stanley Insulating Company, Great Barrington, Mass. New York Office: 43 Exchange Place.

Should it fall off the table or from an upstairs window, it will not break

Carried by all overseas fliers

Alcock used Stanley bottles on his non-stop flight.
NC-4 carried the Stanley.
Hawker carried the Stanley on his spectacular flight.

Go on with the picnic. If the Stanley falls on a rock it will not break, because it is made of steel

Watch Your Shoes Improve

When first you purchase your white kid shoes, how careful you are with them.

But white kids will soil quickly. How can you best keep them spotless? Some cleaners seem to "plaster" them white—but Griffin White Kidine—a white kid dressing—does more—it extracts the dirt and leaves on the shoes a lily whiteness. It prevents the leather from cracking—does not stiffen the shoes, and restores that "new" look which they originally had.

The Best Way to use Rouge

The specialist who created the wonderful La-may Face Powder has invented a new rouge. The rouge is inside the puff. All you do is to rub the puff on your face. It comes through the puff just as you need it. It goes on splendidly and stays on the face until you wash it off. The puff is in a dainty metal box. The box cannot break and the rouge will not crumble like the old-fashioned kind. This newly invented rouge is called La-may (French, Rouge L'Amé). It gives a beautiful color that looks natural under the strongest light. There are two colors—medium and dark. The fifty-cent package will last six months, yet the box is small enough to fit your purse. When you use this pure, harmless Rouge and see how much more convenient it is and how much better it stays on, you will understand why thousands of women say it is the best they have ever used. Because La-may Rouge is so new, your dealer may not have it yet, but he can easily get it. Show this notice to your dealer and if he refuses to get you a package you may order by mail from Herbert Roystone, 16 E. 18th St., New York.

Washing need not hurt fine fabrics

The gentle Lux way actually saves them

YES, there's tell-tale yellowness on all the cob-web threads. Your real Chantilly. Nearly a hundred years old and so very precious! In the old days who ever dreamed the time would come when you could launder it?

Yet today you think nothing more of trusting priceless lace to bubbling Lux suds than you used to think of washing ginghams!

You simply stir up a bowlful of the richest lather and toss in your finest, filmiest belongings without a qualm. Fine laces, thinnest chiffons, exquisite table linens and woolens! Your daintiest curtains will stay whole, your silks lustrous, your blankets soft and woolly.

Delicate Lux suds! If you have never used Lux, you can't begin to appreciate how pure, how cleansing they are!

Lux comes in dainty, white flakes—pure and transparent. They melt instantly in hot water. You whisk them up into the richest, foamiest suds, that gently free the dirt! For silks or delicate colors, you simply add cold water until the suds are lukewarm.

No ruinous rubbing of fine fabrics! No injury to delicate fibres or coarsening of textures! The delicate lustre of your softest silks remains undimmed.

With Lux you just squeeze the delicate suds through the fabrics again and again—rinse in clear water once, twice, three times—and the garment is so fair and fresh that you would never know it had been washed.

Use Lux the moment a thing becomes soiled. The gentle Lux way of washing saves it from the damage even a little dirt does to frail things.

Lux won't hurt anything that pure water alone won't injure.

Get a package of Lux today from your grocer, druggist or department store.—Lever Bros. Co., Cambridge, Mass.

So quick! So easy! Launder all these things in delicate Lux suds

How to wash blankets

Use two tablespoonfuls of Lux to every gallon of water. Whisk Lux into a rich lather in boiling or very hot water, then add cold water to make the suds lukewarm. Work the blankets about in the thick suds, sousing them thoroughly, but do not rub. Squeeze the cleansing suds again and again through soiled spots. Rinse in three waters the same temperature as that in which you washed them. Dissolve a little Lux in the last rinsing water—but do not make a lather. This leaves the blankets softer and fluffier. Run them through a loose wringer; never twist. Hang in the shade to dry, in a moderate temperature.

To wash silk underthings

Just drop a tablespoonful of Lux into half a bowlful of boiling or very hot water. Whisk into a rich, creamy lather. Add cold water till lukewarm. Dip the garment through the foamy lather many times—work it about in the suds—do not rub. Rinse three times in clear, lukewarm water. Squeeze the water out—do not wring. Roll in a towel. When nearly dry, press with a warm iron—never a hot one.

To wash fine silk blouses

Whisk a tablespoonful of Lux into a thick lather in half a bowlful of boiling or very hot water. Add cold water till lukewarm. Dip your blouse through the foamy lather many times. Squeeze the suds through it—do not rub. Rinse in three waters of the same temperature as the water in which you washed it. Squeeze the water out—do not wring. Roll in a towel to dry. When nearly dry, press with a warm iron—never a hot one. Georgette crepe blouses should be gently pulled into shape as they dry and also should be shaped as they are ironed.

To wash your sweater

Use two tablespoonfuls of Lux to every gallon of water. Whisk Lux into a rich lather in boiling or very hot water, then add cold water to make the suds lukewarm. Swish your sweater about in the suds. Wash quickly, pressing the suds through the sweater, but do not rub. Rinse three times in water of the same temperature as that in which you washed it. Dissolve a little Lux in the last rinsing to leave your sweater soft and woolly. Never wring sweaters. Squeeze the water out, pull into shape, and spread on a towel to dry in the shade.

To wash collars and cuffs

Use a tablespoonful of Lux to every gallon of water. Dissolve in very hot water and whisk into a thick lather. Let white linen or cotton accessories soak for a few minutes. Then dip them up and down in the creamy lather. Do not rub. Press the suds again and again through very soiled spots. Put through three hot rinse waters. Dry in the sun. Wash Georgettes, silks and colors as above but in lukewarm suds. Do not soak. Rinse three times, in lukewarm water. Roll in a towel to dry.

DRY DAYS AHEAD

Opposition Active as First Phase of Prohibition Draws Near

AN official of one of the two departments upon which will fall the enforcement of wartime prohibition, when he was asked for a forecast in Washington a few days ago, replied:

"It is one big mess."

He added that, although he was a prohibition man, having fought for it in his home State until it was won there, he thought a mistake had been made in attempting the tremendous undertaking of enforcement without the fullest preparation in advance, both in a carefully devised code and thereafter in the organization of extensive machinery necessary to carry the code into effect. It would be much better for the cause, he said, if the Wartime Prohibition act were off the statute books, and if the time between now and Jan. 16 could be used in framing legislation and building an organization for the enforcement of the Eighteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution.

But this particular prohibitionist is at the opposite pole of opinion from those who direct the dry forces at Washington. With probably not less than two-thirds of Congress in their control, and able to impose what policy they will, they have steadfastly refused to listen to any proposals for a postponement. [As this article is being written there is still a possibility of the wartime act's modification by Presidential order. Its suspension, however, would not lessen the anti-prohibitionists' apparently losing fight against the Constitutional Amendment, effective next January.]

How Good Are You On Names and Faces?

Try This 1-Minute Test

First—Cover the lower half of this page with a sheet of paper. Do it now.

Second—You have just been introduced to the eight men shown at the right. Concentrate for 30 seconds on memorizing their names and faces. Imagine that it is important for you to know each one when you meet him again.

Third—At the end of 30 seconds place the sheet of paper over this half of the page, uncovering the pictures of the same eight men below. Take a pencil and, in 30 seconds, write the name of each as you remember it beneath his picture. How many of these men would you have offended by asking them to repeat their names? Read further to find what this test shows.

How to Improve Your Memory in One Evening

Remembering names and faces, like remembering anything else, is extremely simple.

YOU should endeavor to avoid hesitation in calling any man by his name even if you have met him only once—and that years before.

This one-minute test of your memory for names and faces is from the works of David M. Roth, the memory expert. With only an ordinary memory you should be able to identify each man after 30 seconds of attention to the whole group and write down all the names accurately immediately afterward. With a fairly good memory you should be able to do the same 24 hours from now. With a well developed and really useful memory you should know every one of these men if you met him anywhere a week or a month or a year hence.

Remembering names and faces seems like a small thing, but it is not so small but that a whole career may turn upon it. It is just one of the daily advantages that make a man or woman more efficient in whatever he is doing. Yet this is only one of the advantages of a better memory. Think of the time and the money wasted in referring to records and memoranda for such things as telephone numbers, addresses, rates, amounts, dates, appointments, quotations, reports, conversations, speeches, statistics. Yet it may be possible to train your memory to seize upon and hold, ready for delivery when needed, much information of frequent use. You can, if you wish, have a better memory within a week.

Why Memory Is Power

But an accurate memory is so much more important than just a means of storing small useful items. It is actually the basis of experience, judgment and knowledge. You can see proof of this everywhere.

Not long ago the President of a hundred million dollar corporation (a man whose name you know well) was called to testify in a lawsuit involving a vast amount of money. Without the aid of notes or records this man produced the most intricate facts and figures bearing upon his business, detailed information about the organization, operation and output of the big concern that nobody else knew and nobody knew that he knew. These facts were given without a moments hesitation. Later they were verified in the most minute particular. This man's memory is worth a fortune to his corporation. It is a priceless asset to himself.

A similar instance came to light recently. The Vice-President of one of America's greatest manufacturing companies is in active charge of the entire production of its many huge plants. Years ago, at the age of thirteen, he quit school and went to work. He became an apprentice to the blacksmith in his home village. He had only the beginnings of an education, but today he is one of the really big executives of the country, being responsible for the work and the products of thousands of employees. Not long ago in an interview he said:

"My memory is today my greatest asset in business. . . . I learned to work for knowledge and to hold on to what I gained."

It is the same way in political and professional life.

Such testimony is the common thing from leaders in every line of work. It is because big responsibilities and big earning power depend upon personal command of knowledge—stored-up knowledge. It matters very little what you learn today if the benefit of your experience is not with you tomorrow or a year from tomorrow. Your judgment is only as good as your memory because all sound decisions must be based upon something learned in the past. Otherwise they are mere guesses—gambles.

Foresight—that priceless quality which marks the most successful men everywhere—is nothing more nor less than applied memory. We can only foresee what may occur from our experience of what has occurred in the past. A simple matter of storing away information.

Wisdom exists through the ability to remember things that have been learned, information gained through experience, facts that have come to our attention, ideas that have reached us from all sources and the knowledge of others expressed to us in speech or in printed words.

So it is that the phrase "I forgot" and all that it stands for have come to be regarded by men generally as a confession of needless weakness and an admission of failure.

Doubters Are Welcome

Amazing letters come daily to David M. Roth from students of the famous Memory Method that bears his name. They come voluntarily, gladly, and bring tremendous testimony of the real money value of the Course and its simplicity. For instance:

"I have actually climbed to the top of a list of 30 salesmen since May 1, 1918, and had a very substantial increase added to my salary. My success is due to your help."—John F. Young, Tunica, Miss. (Letter dated Dec. 22, 1918.)

"The Roth Memory Course has been worth hundreds of dollars to me already."—L. D. Smith, Buffalo, Okla.

And this from a man who seems to have expected but little help when he asked to see the Roth Course:

"The remarkable simplicity and greatness of your course cannot be expressed in words or dollars. I have just completed the second lesson and am on the road to a better memory and concentration power, an achievement that I had hitherto held as nearly impossible to accomplish."—E. M. Motry, Sandusky, Ohio.

Such letters reach Mr. Roth by the hundred. Men and women in all walks of life and engaged in all sorts of occupations offer various testimony as different phases of this great method appeal to them. Notice this:

"You should have said that any person can improve his memory in two hours."—Charles A. Horan, 1541 W. Lehigh Ave., Philadelphia, Pa.

And from a physician at the U. S. Naval Hospital at Norfolk, Va.:

"I have several other memory courses which have been hard work to study. This is so simple and fascinating that, once started, I don't want to stop."

Some admit freely that they sent for the Roth Course out of curiosity. Others say that they felt sure it would be of no value to them up to the moment they opened the first lesson. And right in that first lesson they found the secret of the whole thing—the key to a reliable, profitable, sure-fire memory and a method to retain and recall things that they wanted to remember.

Send No Money

It is easy to prove these things for yourself, and without risking a single penny. In fact, if you are not thoroughly satisfied with the value of the course after examining it Mr. Roth would much rather you did not keep it. But there is no doubt of your finding it as practical, as useful, as interesting and as necessary as thousands of others have found it.

Send no money whatever. The seven easy lessons which comprise the Roth Memory Course will be sent you all charges prepaid immediately upon receipt of your name and address. Use the coupon below or write a note. When the course reaches you examine it for five days. If you decide not to keep it simply send it back and you will owe nothing.

How Have the Mighty Fallen!

wartime prohibition and the Eighteenth Amendment, but even with speedy acting this measure is not expected to pass both houses for two weeks. If it were rushed through before that time, there would be required the period for the organization of the machinery of enforcement it provides. At the head of this machinery, as proposed in view of the increased responsibility entailed, is a Prohibition Commissioner, and a special fund of $2,500,000 is appropriated to carry out the act. To try to start in without this, the opponents urge, is to run a large risk of a growth of disrespect for law—this law in particular and indirectly all law—and at a time when respect for the law, owing to disorders over the world, is of enhanced importance. The drys answer that wartime prohibition is a law, and that it is the duty of all citizens to respect it and aid officers in its enforcement. On this subject E. C. Dinwiddie, Superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League in Washington, said the other day:

"We are not looking for trouble and we do not expect any, but now is the time, if it is necessary to try out Americanism, to see whether we stand for law and its enforcement. Many issues now exist which depend on respect for the law."

Mr. Dinwiddie said that the militant prohibition sentiment in all the States would be called upon to see that violations of the law were prosecuted.

There are many sides to the prohibition situation. The questions most discussed today are the chances of the wartime act's enforcement after June 30, and the prospect of the wets' being able to have the act set aside or to make a successful attack on the constitutional amendment.

As to enforcement of the law in effect at midnight tomorrow without the aid of the special code now being prepared for the statute books, two departments are concerned. They are the Internal Revenue Bureau of the Treasury Department and the Department of Justice. At present the authority of the Internal Revenue Department to enforce penalties grows out of its tax-collecting function. Of the Wartime Prohibition Act, which passed as a part of the Agricultural bill, the Bureau of Internal Revenue holds the following opinion:

"Enforcement of the prohibitions of the act, therefore, is not placed with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, or lodged anywhere in the Government, but is naturally left to the United States Attorney to enforce by prosecutions under the section of the act which provides that 'any person who violates any of the foregoing provisions shall be punished by imprisonment not to exceed one year, or by fine not to exceed $1,000, or both such imprisonment and fine.'"

There is a difference of opinion as to what department of the Government should include the proposed Prohibition Commissioner. The following is from an opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury, Carter Glass, sent to the House Judiciary Committee:

"I beg to say that I am convinced that the Federal prohibitory laws can best be enforced through a Prohibition Commissioner, as outlined in the bill. In my belief, however, he and his agents and assistants should be a part of the Department of Justice in the punishment of lawbreakers. The Department of Justice has had considerable experience in enforcing prohibitory laws under the Webb-Kenyon act and the Reed amendment. It therefore not only has the foundation of the necessary machinery for the more extensive enforcement of prohibition, but through this experience it should also be of greater assistance in making suggestions as to the enforcement than this department can be."

As it stands now, however, the committee's prevailing opinion is that the Treasury shall have the Prohibition Commissioner, on the ground that there will still be some liquor tax collecting on liquor permitted for scientific purposes, and that as special regulation will be necessary for the enforcement of the code, the prosecutor (that is, the Department of Justice) should not make the collections. Whichever department finally gets the Prohibition Commissioner, neither Treasury nor Justice is looking for it—that is, from the standpoint of preparations in advance. But there is no doubt that these laws now in force will be invoked by both departments, as far as possible, against violators of the Wartime Prohibition act.

A development that adds to the complexity of the situation is the announcement of the Internal Revenue Department that it will sell special tax stamps covering the sale of liquor for twelve months beginning July 1. This announcement contains the following:

"The bureau will, in accordance with the opinion of the Attorney General, continue to sell stamps to applicants with the distinct understanding that the purchase and possession of such stamps in nowise authorizes the manufacture or sale of the beverages for which such stamps may be intended."

Some people have interpreted this to mean that the coming dry spell will not last long, and that there will be a wet interim of several months before the Federal amendment goes into effect in January. There is no longer a chance that Congress will follow the advice of the President and repeal the Wartime Prohibition act. The only chance of a wet interval, therefore, would seem to be for the President to issue a proclamation that, as the act provides, the war being concluded and demobilization completed, the prohibition is brought to an end. As this article is being written, the wets are saying that Mr. Wilson will take such action on the theory that the demobilization of all our forces except those of the regular army is practically complete. The drys answer that it is idle to talk about the war's being at an end until the Senate has ratified the Peace Treaty, and that when that will be done cannot be foreseen. Between these two opinions there will be, as it looks now, an interval, before Jan. 16 when the war will have been ended and all except the forces of the regular army demobilised. But it is a question with many whether a wet period of two or three months following a period of dry enforcement would not add to the confusion, as the ordinary vehicles of distribution, such as saloons, would not find it worth while to open for such a short time.

The uncertainty of the ground from which to draw conclusions is shown by the forecast that some saloons will remain open, if advice given them by counsel is followed. In the wet States what is an "intoxicating" liquor is not defined on a per cent. of alcohol basis. In many of the dry States this is fixed at one-half of 1 per cent., and that is the standard in the bill now before Congress. Few of the States have standards that are identical in all respects, so that when the present bill becomes a Federal law there will be much variance between the Federal and State viewpoints. Here enters the chief struggle, for, as one leading wet advocate put it, they look for little of Congress, expecting it to carry out the will of the Anti-Saloon League, but will make their fight through the courts. The wets contend that Congress has no right to define what is "intoxicating" under the amendment, but that it is a matter of fact for the courts to pass upon. In New York, in injunction proceedings, the brewers have thus far won the decision that beer containing no more than 2¾ per cent. of alcohol is not intoxicating. Unless this decision is reversed, brewers and saloon keepers in New York and in other wet territory under similar legislation conditions will be advised to continue to sell beer not containing more than 2¾ per cent. of alcohol on the legal ground that it is nonintoxicating. If this is done there is no doubt that there will be many arrests, with another type of test case to be carried to the highest court in the land. The brewers' representatives declare themselves confident that both under wartime prohibition and th Eighteenth Amendment they will be abl eventually to win a court decision en abling them to continue to manufacture and sell 2¾ per cent. beer. In fact, it is apparent they are far more interested in this than in any fight to overturn the Eighteenth Amendment.

On the right of Congress to define "intoxicating," Wayne B. Wheeler, general counsel for the Anti-Saloon League, said last week:

"Congress has the same power to enact a law enforcement code that State Legislatures have to enforce their constitutional provisions prohibiting the beverage liquor traffic. I contend that unless Congress defines the term 'intoxicating liquor' the Eighteenth Amendment cannot be enforced."

The fight on the constitutional amendment is the distillers' particular fight—a forlorn hope many think, but they are preparing to make a determined attack on the measure, and a mass of individual litigation on this subject is soon to come. Preparatory thereto, meetings of attorneys selected to carry on the battle are now being held. In addition to private suits the Rhode Island Legislature has adopted a resolution instructing the Attorney General to bring suit to determine the constitutionality of the amendment.

In this resolution it is asserted that the amendment does not amend the system of government erected by the Constitution, but completely alters and transforms that system; that the amendment invests Congress with police powers in the States hitherto exclusively exercised by them, and thus makes a revolutionary change in the Government through such extension of the Federal power as to enforce upon the States a national police power to be exercised within their borders. The contention is that each one of the States would have to give its consent to such a change, on the ground that the amendment takes away a power reserved to the States.

Rhode Island was the last State to ratify the Constitution, and before it finally decided to do so, obtained an agreement that this among other powers should be reserved to the States by the Constitution, embracing "the first ten amendments constituting the national Bill of Rights," the resolution states.

Three other grounds besides the allegation of invasion of the States' police powers are held to be of importance by the distillers' lawyers for an attack on the amendment. Chief among these is the contention that the amendment has not been ratified by the required three-fourths of the States; that those States which have been officially accepted as having ratified included some which had in their laws referendum provisions, and that these referenda with affirmative answers on prohibition must be carried out before ratification can be legally declared to be valid.

When thirty-six States had ratified the amendment, the Acting Secretary of State, Frank L. Polk, made formal announcement that the amendment had been carried. One of these States was Ohio, which, it happened, had a referendum provision specifically including the submitting of constitutional amendments to the people. Here it was that the wets opened up their referendum end of the fight. The status of the case is that Ohio is to vote on the prohibition referendum at the next November election. California, another one of the thirty-six, the wets assert, is in a situation closely similar to that of Ohio, but they contend that, if Ohio should reject the amendment, it would destroy the legality of the Secretary of State's announcement, and even if by that time the required thirty-six, referendum proof, had ratified, the Secretary would have an announcement dating from next November and making the amendment effective one year from the time of the announcement as the law requires.

The States in which the wets have raised the question of the referendum are: Arkansas, California, Colorado, Ohio, Oklahoma, Oregon, Maine, Michigan, Missouri, Nevada, New Mexico, South Dakota, Utah, and Washington. The bases for these contentions vary, as court decisions already rendered show. In Oregon and Arkansas, for example, the courts have ruled against the wets, while in Washington a referendum has been ordered.

By legislative act forty-five States have ratified the amendment, and the contention of the drys is that, even if several States should reject the amendment on referendum, there would still be more than enough to make the measure effective; they assert also that the claim that the Secretary of State would have to make another announcement will not be sustained by the courts, and that this attitude on the part of the wets is characteristic of their policy of attempting to take refuge in technicalities to stave off the coming of national prohibition.

The Back Room of the Old-Time Barroom. Brown Bros.

Another point of attack by the distillers is on Section 2 of the amendment. "The Congress and the Several States have concurrent power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation."

"This," said one of the leading counsel of the distillers, "is a monstrosity. There is no such thing as concurrent power. One might as well say that a regiment can have two Colonels. That section would mean, if carried out, that Congress and Rhode Island would have the same power to enforce the amendment in Ohio or Maine. In order to prevent a conflict here we would have to assume that Congress's prohibition law and Rhode Island's were identical. They are not now and are not likely to be, Rhode Island having a 4 per cent. alcohol standard. To make the section applicable harmoniously to the whole Union we would have to suppose that the prohibition laws in each and every State were identical with the Federal law. On past experience that is not to be expected. We have had concurrent jurisdiction before, but never concurrent power. Congress has heretofore had paramount power. Those who see here an irreconcilable conflict believe that the amendment should be resubmitted, and a single sanction put in instead of a double one."

Still another ground of attack is that a limit of seven years was made for the ratification of the amendment. This, it is asserted, is unconstitutional in that it fixes a time where there should have been opportunity for unlimited deliberation.

One important end of the problem is what is to be done with the whisky left in bond and the whisky and other liquor remaining in the saloons when prohibition goes into effect.

In the bonded warehouses will be 60,000,000 gallons of whisky, it is estimated, valued roughly at $150,000,000, tax unpaid. It has been proposed by the drys to convert this into alcohol for industrial purposes, but the answer made is that the cost of this process would eat up a large part of the value of the whisky. What the distillers want, if they are unable to find a hole in the amendment, is for the Government to buy the whisky and do with it whatever it pleases.

For the liquor left in the saloons when closing comes no provision has been made. It could be smuggled out in many ping him on the shoulder, said with the usual French politeness: "Pardon me, Monsieur, I wish to say a few words to you." Ravachol, taken by surprise, retorted: "I don't know you, Sir." "But I know you; you are Ravachol," broke in the Inspector, "and if you make a move I'll blow your brains out," at the same time pointing a revolver at the man. Quickly the detectives, who, from their vantage point, had witnessed the scene, jumped on Ravachol, threw him on the ground and handcuffed him, dragging him literally to a cab which was in waiting around the corner.

The arrest of Ravachol quickly became known, the newspapers published extras, and the Boulevard Magenta, in which was situated the restaurant Véry, became a place of pilgrimage.

The restaurant itself became a Parisian attraction; the provincial, the stranger temporarily in the French capital, every man and woman of Paris visited the place. M. Véry, like all Frenchmen, perceived quickly his opportunity for advertising purposes. The table where Ravachol had taken luncheon was polished and repolished until it shone in a resplendent light; an appropriate inscription was carved on it: "Here ate Ravachol the day of his arrest."

Paris and France felt relieved and everybody, particularly the police, was happy. But this happiness did not last long.

While Ravachol's past was being investigated by a Judge appointed for that purpose, according to French custom, Paris was suddenly startled by a new anarchistic crime.

The restaurant Véry was blown to smithereens in broad daylight, several patrons were killed or injured, Véry, the owner of the place, had his two legs shot off, his wife under the terrific shock became a raving maniac, while the waiter received but slight injuries.

Again the police were accused of carelessness, again excitement ran high. As the day approached for the trial of Ravachol, unusual precautions were taken to protect the magnificent Palais de Justice (Court House) and all those who directly or indirectly had business there during the trial.

Criminal procedure in France is incomprehensible to an American mind; the weird customs of the Criminal Court (Cour d'Assises) give room for thought and for criticism to an American who witnesses the proceedings.

The trial commences by the reading of the indictment of the prosecuting attorney before the audience and the court. The document is made up of the report of the Investigating Magistrate, (Juge d'Instruction,) who has delved in every nook and corner of the accused man's life from his birth up to the time he is brought before justice. After reading of the indictment, the Presiding Judge proceeds to interrogate the alleged criminal. Neither the counsel for the accused nor the prosecuting attorney representing the State is permitted to ask questions directly either of the accused or of the witnesses. Every question must be put through and by the Presiding Judge. The lawyer may, if the President refuses to ask a question which, in the opinion of counsel, is important to the defense of his client, raise an objection. But the objection must be put in writing then and there, and the paper is filed with the records of the case to be used eventually before the Court of Appeals.

That is the procedure that was followed in the Ravachol trial. After his interrogation by the Presiding Judge—an encounter in which the anarchist displayed considerable skill—the witnesses were heard. Then began the real fight in the magnificent literary duel between Quesnay de Beaurepaire, the prosecuting attorney, representing the State, and Lagasse, the counsel for the defendant.

Both of these gentlemen were the pride of the Bar Association of Paris, both were known as most eloquent debaters, which fact explains why the courtroom was crowded to suffocation by men most eminent in the field of literature.

The task of the State's attorney was comparatively easy, Ravachol having admitted his guilt. Lagasse, his counsel, did not attempt to whitewash the criminal; the trend of his oratory was to convince the jury that, the father and grandfather of his client having committed murder in their time, crime was hereditary in the Ravachol family and that therefore the capital punishment itked for by the State would not constitute a just verdict.

The jury was evidently impressed with the argument, as, by a vote of 7 to 5, it brought in a verdict of guilty, with "extenuating circumstances." Contrary to American law, unanimity is not required from a jury in French courts either for conviction or for acquittal; a majority vote of the twelve men is recognized as sufficient. The "extenuating circumstances" clause is another of the privileges of a French jury. In this particular case it saved the life of Ravachol, whom the court sentenced to hard labor for life.

Ravachol, however, did not gain much by this verdict, as he was subsequently tried for the murder of the "Old Hermit," which he had committed a few years before his anarchistic exploits. He was sentenced to death and was executed in Paris in June, 1892.

So ends the story of Ravachol, King of Anarchists.

One and Another

Her words were dipped in vinegar
And left a sting behind;
"She's so sincere," her kind friends said,
"She always speaks her mind."

Her heart was filled with kindest thoughts,
Which spoke in word and tone,
"Ah, ha," smiled they: "Such flattery!
She's kissed the Blarney Stone."

directions, and among disreputable saloon keepers would offer a source for brisk bootlegging.

Under the present laws no cognizance will be taken of liquor held in private hands when the country goes dry, but the bill now being shaped by Congress to provide a prohibition code, a condition is imposed that will afford a check on what one has in "storage." That particular part of the bill, which is likely to be a law within a month, reads:

"But it shall not be unlawful to possess liquor in one's private dwelling while the same is occupied and used by him as his dwelling; provided, that the liquor was obtained and placed there prior to the date when this act goes into effect, but the burden of showing such liquor was so obtained and placed therein prior to that date shall be upon the person claiming the right to possess and keep the same."

Recalcitrant Rhode Island

RHODE ISLAND'S Legislature has instructed her Attorney General to take what action he deems proper relating to the Eighteenth Amendment, which she has declined to ratify. The tiny State, smallest of the sisters which make up the nation, has also passed a law defining an intoxicant as a drink having more than 4 per cent. of alcohol, thus defying those statesmen in Washington who would brand any potation containing the least alcohol as intoxicating within the meaning of the statute.

What the Attorney General of Rhode Island is going to do about opposing the amendment is still in the lap of the gods, and it is likely to stay there until a more convenient season. In common with Connecticut and New Jersey, which have been quite as stubborn in maintaining their sovereignty at all times, "Little Rhody" is marking time. As the constitutional drought act is not yet in effect, and as Congress has not passed any enactment for enforcing it, eminent counsel who have been following the rum question believe that for the present the Attorney General can do little. He needs must wait, they say, until some one enters the State and seeks to arrest a citizen for vending alcoholic beverages against the majesty and peace of these United States. Any citizen then may, with the aid of the legal adviser of the self-sufficient State of Rhode Island, take action.

It may be recalled that Rhode Island was born contrary, and has always had the courage of her beliefs from the days of her truculent founder, Roger Williams. That English clergyman could not live in amity with the Puritan forebears of Massachusetts, for he was a walking digest on the rights of the individual. He had come to this continent for freedom in thought and action, and he meant to have it. He spoke his mind all too freely and, therefore, had to take to the tall timber. After fourteen weeks of wandering in the wilderness he emerged upon the promised land which the Indians called Narragansett. There he set up the city of Providence, which to this day is proud of the Colonial Iskandel who called her into being.

Hardly had Rhode Island become a colony before both Massachusetts and Connecticut sought ways and means to absorb her settlements and plantations into their own territories. The reverend reformer thereupon went to England, and, finding King and Parliament at loggerheads, succeeded in getting a charter from the legislative body and came back with it to his fellow-colonists, who received him with glad acclaim. There was no grant of land with the charter, but Rhode Island was amply sufficient within herself to maintain her claims to her territory against all comers. The burning zeal to defend all her rights as a community was thus kindled in the bosoms of the islanders from the earliest days. This may account in some degree for the fact that, although never noted for consuming thirst, they are determined to retain their autonomy in the matter of alcohol.

Rhode Island so opposed the idea of a strong Central Government, after the war of the Revolution had been won, that she resolutely refused to send delegates to the Constitutional Convention. When the document was finally adopted Rhode Island and North Carolina did not ratify it until the Federal Government which it created was actually in operation. Being one of the last two of the colonies to ratify the instrument, therefore, "Rhody" has always seen fit to consider any constitutional change with the greatest care.

For years after independence had been won Rhode Island was a battleground over which Federalist and anti-Federalist stumped and roamed. There was enough of the Federal element to lend some secret aid and comfort to the constitutional idea, although not enough of it to send even one delegate to take part in its realization. Therefore, Rhode Island was constantly scored in the newspapers supported by the friends of centralized rule, and especially was she censured in the series of letters combined in the Federalist and written largely by Alexander Hamilton and James Madison.

"The half yearly representatives of Rhode Island," to quote from an issue ascribed to Hamilton, "would probably have been little affected in their deliberations on the iniquitious measures of that State by arguments drawn from the light in which such measures would be viewed by foreign nations, or even by sister States, while it can scarcely be doubted that if the concurrence of a select and stable body had been necessary, a regard to national character alone would have prevented the calamities under which that misguided people is now laboring."

The persistence of Rhode Island caused much discussion and also much righteous indignation in the adjoining Commonwealths of Massachusetts and Connecticut, and one of the orators of the day asked if it were not time "that this example of turpitude be dismembered and joined to those two States." This coming from Connecticut was more than the Rhode Islanders could bear, for the Land of the Wooden Nutmeg had always been such a stickler for State rights, and is to this day, that she was often referred to as being as contumacious as the Isle of Clams herself.

"Connecticut and Rhode Island," as Paul Leicester Ford was so fond of quoting, "are little republics embosomed in a gigantic empire."

Both these States had, indeed, enacted as their Constitutions their royal charters of the seventeenth century, and to this day they fairly bristle with sovereignty. Rhode Island, too, insisted that she should not be required to hasten in giving assent to the Constitution, in view of the fact that even the States which had been among the first to sign and ratify had held out until ten amendments had been granted. Many of her citizens had been made insolvent by the war, and she believed that she ought to work out her own fiscal salvation and issue her own money and manage her own internal affairs.

Especially did the diminutive Commonwealth stand out on her right to exercise all police powers within her borders, and it was not until the Tenth Amendment was interpreted as meaning that she should have such jurisdiction that she gave her reluctant compliance.

This Tenth Amendment reads:

"The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people."

The paragraph has been interpreted to mean that the people may rise and nullify the acts of their own State Legislatures, which would give them the power to pass even on such subjects as liquor prohibition, if they so desired. Rhode Island would stand squarely on her right to prevent the sale and manufacture of intoxicating drink, if her people willed it, and she might even go so far, as some States have done, as to prevent the vending within her borders of beverages containing malt and no alcohol. But when her people are against the Federal anti-liquor dictum, she contends that the Federal Government has no right to impose it upon them.

The question of enforcement in Rhode Island has a more biting zest because of the fighting qualities which are inherent in that State. She would be likely to stand out the longest because the wording of the first section of the dry Eighteenth Amendment is likely to open up many grounds for debate.

"After one year," to employ the exact phrase, "from the ratification of this article the manufacture, sale or transportation of intoxicating liquors within, the importation thereof into, or the exportation thereof from, the United States and all territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof for beverage purposes is hereby prohibited."

What is an intoxicating drink? As the National Legislature has not yet promulgated its understanding as to what shall be considered an intoxicant for the purpose of enforcing the Eighteenth Amendment, what shall be said regarding the Rhode Island standard of 4 per cent.?

Eminent counsel representing the national brewing interests are seeking to establish in the courts that beer containing 2.75 per cent. of alcohol or less is not intoxicating. Here is a question of fact: Can the Supreme Court of the United States decide what is a fact, as well as pass upon fine points of law? Shall the definition of what is intoxicating be left to the judgment of juries, who, in every case, whether held before the Rhode Island Assizes or not, must pass again and again upon what shall constitute the error of Noah?

It is specified in Section 2 of the arid amendment that "Congress shall have concurrent power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation."

As Rhode Island has not concurred in the original legislation of the nation on this subject, what rule of reason shall apply concerning the thirst of her citizens? If she has not exercised any power to prevent their libations, how can she concur in prohibition?

The report of the committee of the State Bar Association of Connecticut, signed by such jurists as Silas A. Robinson, Milton A. Shumway, Joseph P. Tuttle, Seymour C. Loomis, and Christopher L. Loomis, is illuminating because Rhode Island and Connecticut, although they traditionally disagree, think much alike on matters of State sovereignty.

"This provision," says the report, "is so clearly wrong that to make it a part of the Constitution would be a most unfortunate event. It would introduce an element of confusion in the enforcement of a great police power. No matter what views may be entertained by a person on the subject of national prohibition, it is of the utmost importance that in respect to matters confided to the Federal Government the Government should have supreme power.

"If this amendment means, as it says, that 'the Congress shall have concurrent power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation,' and as that necessarily implies that there must be concurrent action by all the States and the United States, all agreeing on the exact form of legislation, then it would be an absurdity, for it is too much to expect that all the States and the United States would exactly agree on subjects about which the several States are in conflict

The Tragedy of Middle Age

WE are average Americans, you and I, and life, with all its obstacles and disappointments, is mighty dear to us. The days pass—the wheel revolves—and soon or late there comes the realization that the years are piling up and that we are close on to middle age. Then inevitably comes the thought: "What will I be doing at sixty-five?"

I look around me and think of the men I knew at twenty-five. How strong and healthy they all were then! How full of promise and great dreams of the future!

Success in large measure has come to some of them, and I am glad. Others have known the tragedy of dreams faded out, and I can read in their eyes that they have given up the struggle and are content to stay where they are—failures at forty!

And when I analyze the lives of these men I find the answer to the success or failure of many, in one word—Health.

Out of every 100 healthy men who are 25 years old today, statistics indicate that 36 will be dead at 65—53 will be dependent on relatives or charity for support—only 5 will be well-off—only 6 will be self-supporting. It is indeed tragic. The Charity Organization Society of New York City shows the relation of health and wealth in the following significant sentence: "In general, it might be said that 77% of the families under the care of the Society had members who were physically unfit."

We are average Americans, you and I, and I want to tell you something of the need and value of periodic health examinations, and what they have done for me.

I want you to forget, if you can, that this is an advertisement and to view it in the same broad, helpful spirit of sincerity with which it is written—to heed it, I might almost hope, as you would heed the advice of the world's foremost physicians.

Don't Neglect Your Health

WE all know that disease does not develop over night. Preceding every illness there is a period of gradual breaking-down that you are not wholly conscious of at the time, but which reduces your natural powers of resistance.

The trouble with many of us is that we don't know any more about our bodies than the average school-boy. Many a man realizes he is not at the top-notch of efficiency, yet is afraid to see his doctor. Almost blindly he gropes his way through life, fearful of disease and suffering, yet taking no step to prevent it.

I have no doubt at all that nine people out of every ten who read this article will admit that they realize the value of periodic physical examinations.

Six or seven will resolve to get such an examination without delay. But procrastination and the pressure of business will dull the edge of resolution for some of them and only four or five will actually get the examination.

Out of every 100 healthy men, 25 years old today, this is what happens by age 65:

Which class will you be in at 65?
The relation of Health and Wealth.
People die too soon.

I know exactly how it is, because just a little over two years ago I was reading a Life Extension Institute advertisement myself.

I saw the logic of its arguments, and I decided to do something. But then—

I put the coupon in my pocket and proceeded to forget it for three weeks—forgot it, in fact, until one of my friends was suddenly stricken and I got to wondering if I was as fundamentally well as I thought I was. So I took the Institute's examination.

It was the most thorough thing of its kind I have ever known. They didn't miss a single part of me. They tested my heart, lungs, kidneys, stomach, liver, and general bodily condition—took my blood-pressure—made a microscopic examination of my blood—tested my eyes and ears—examined my teeth—pored over my personal history blank for traces of hereditary disease—told me about the quarterly urinalyses—literally made a spot map of my body and my entire life.

I tell you frankly that that examination has added ten years to my life. You can't imagine what a load it has taken off my mind. I now know exactly where I stand and just what I've got to do if I want to live out my allotted three-score-years-and-ten.

Telephone, Bryant 1997

Ex-President Taft Interested

THE Life Extension Institute was founded more than four years ago by ex-President Taft, Alexander Graham Bell, Prof. Irving Fisher, of Yale, Robert W. de Forest and one hundred other eminent authorities in this country and abroad.

The one and only purpose of the Institute is just this: To spread broadcast the principles of health that every man and woman ought to know to avoid disease and needless suffering, and to provide regular periodic health examinations at a moderate price to people in all walks of life.

The Institute gives to all its members appropriate hygienic guidance and instruction, but does not include in its service medical or surgical treatment. If the impairments found are serious, the member is told of the need of medical, surgical or dental attention, and is informed of the type of treatment that would be most advantageous.

The Life Extension Institute is a public-welfare organization on a self-supporting basis. Two-thirds of the profits are set aside in a trust fund for public health work of a national scope.

More than 100,000 men and women have been examined by the Institute and have received in addition its guidance and instructions. It makes no difference where you live. The Institute comes to you wherever you are. It has its Head Office right in New York, and a staff of 5,000 physicians in all parts of the United States.

Examinations of subscribers who live in New York and vicinity are made at the main office of the Institute, 25 West 45th Street—on appointment by telephone or letter—between the hours of 9 A. M. and 5 P. M. Visitors are always welcome at the office of the Institute. An opportunity is thus afforded to learn of the work of the Institute and what membership means to you personally. Women physicians are available at the main office for women members who prefer them.

We are average Americans, you and I, and I come to you today to urge you not to put it off. Business is important—pleasure is important—but nothing is more important than health. Without health there can be no success—no sixty-five without dependency.

Don't put it off. Send in the coupon and learn all about the Life Extension Institute—the high character of the men behind it—the details of its thorough physical examination—the quarterly urinalyses—the monthly health journals, the Keep-Well Bulletins, etc.

and where there is so much diversity of opinion.

"The subject under consideration would be what constitutes intoxicating liquors—that is, what percentage of alcohol would make a liquid intoxicating? The range of legislation would probably be anywhere from one-half of 1 per cent. to 5 per cent.

"Another subject about which the Congress and the forty-eight States would not agree would be what constitutes 'beverage purposes.' There would be easily forty-nine laws on the subject, and no person would know how he stood in respect thereto, for, while acting entirely within the laws of one State, he might be acting exactly contrary to the laws of other States, and perhaps contrary to the law of the United States.

"The States already have the power to prohibit the transportation and the dealing in and use of liquor within themselves, and the United States Congress has passed an act prohibiting the transportation of liquor in any State or through any State where it is prohibited by the State Government. The Supreme Court of the United States has approved and found the act constitutional. This law is known as the Webb-Kenyon act.

"The very evident intent, then, of the Prohibition amendment is to force its provisions upon those States which do not want it. It is clear that in such States at least there must be endless conflict between the Federal and the State authorities under this Section 2, where 'concurrent power' is given."

The report also sets forth that in cases in reference to boundary waters between different States it has been decided that, where there is concurrent power of these waters, no regulations by either can be effective unless consented to by the other.

The Bar Association of the City of New York urged the New York State Legislature not to ratify the amendment in its present form, especially because of the confusion about current jurisdiction, which in its opinion would induce a confusion of power and a conflict of jurisdiction far reaching in its consequences. The Legislature of New York, however, did ratify the amendment, although it postponed enacting a law for its enforcement and defining intoxicating liquors.

Austin G. Fox, in his brief against prohibition submitted at a hearing before the joint Judiciary and Excise Commission of the New York Legislature, in carrying out the instructions of the President of the New York State Bar Association, Charles E. Hughes, dwelt upon some of the phases of State rights raised by Rhode Island.

"This amendment," said he, "seems to be drawn in a form that must make it equally objectionable to the disciples of Madison and those of Jefferson. If the Federal Government is to be intrusted with this power it is no concern whatever of the States. If the States are to enforce it by appropriate legislation, why should the Congress be permitted to interfere?

"Let us assume that the prohibition of the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors is desirable and that the principle ought to be embodied in the Federal Constitution. It is for those who advocate the amendment to show that, in its present form, it is expedient, or at least not inexpedient, to insert it in the Federal Constitution. This is the first time that any one has suggested that it is expedient to state in terms that Congress and the several States shall have concurrent power to enforce any article of the Constitution by appropriate legislation."

In the case of Houston vs. Moore the judgment of the court was delivered by Mr. Justice Washington, who said that to subject citizens to the operation of two laws upon the same subject, dictated by distinct wills, particularly in a case inflicting pains and penalties, was something very much like oppression, if not worse.

"In short," said the jurist, "I am altogether incapable of comprehending how two distinct wills can, at the same time, be exercised in relation to the same subject, to be effectual and at the same time compatible with each other."

The views of another New York jurist, Edgar M. Cullen, a retired Chief Judge of the Court of Appeals, were given a few months since and have a bearing on the Rhode Island contention.

"There is no justification for Federal control of the subject at all," he wrote. "We all believe in home rule. The observance of this principle, instead of weakening our loyalty to national unity, is the dominant cause of our devotion to it. It needs no amendment to the Constitution to protect the rights of the prohibition States. Under recent acts of Congress, and the decision of the Supreme Court construing them, a prohibition State has the same absolute power to forbid not only the manufacture but the sale of liquors, but to restrain their importation into the State, as if the State were an independent nation. But what those States seek is not to protect their own people, but to rule those of other States. It cannot be denied, however, that this is eminently a human trait, but nevertheless a most unfortunate one and productive of great evil."

There is a reflex also of the view of the States which have not ratified the prohibition amendment in a recent letter directed by William H. Taft, ex-President of the United States, to Allen B. Lincoln of Hartford, Conn. He wrote:

"The regulation of the sale and use of intoxicating liquors should be retained by the States. They can experiment and improve. They have full power, and the Federal Government has helped them by making it a Federal offense to import liquor into their borders if they forbid it. If the power of regulation is committed irrevocably to the General Government, the next generation will live deeply to regret it.

"For these reasons, therefore, first, because a permanent national liquor law in many communities will prove unenforceable for lack of local public sympathy; second, because attempted enforcement will require an enormous number of Federal policemen and detectives, giving undue power to a sinister and partisan subordinate of the National Administration; and, third, because it means an unwise structural change in the relations between the people of the States and the Central Government and a strain to the integrity of the Union, I am opposed to a national prohibition amendment."

These are some of the considerations and the opinions which embolden Rhode Island, as one of the three States still opposed to the approaching drought, to come out boldly against the measure, which in the opinion of the majority of her lawmakers and of many lawyers throughout the country is at variance with her long-established decision to maintain herself as sovereign in all things relating to the habits of her citizenry.

Ancient Rome's Naval Station

ARCHAEOLOGISTS who have accompanied the Italian Army of Occupation of Istria have made some interesting discoveries of Roman remains on the site of Aquileia, twenty-two miles northwest of the Port of Trieste.

Aquileia was the great transadriatic emporium of ancient Rome, the autumnal residence of the Emperor Augustus, and the great station of the Roman fleet. It then had a population of 200,000 and its villas were surpassed by none outside the valley of the Digentia. Attila destroyed it in 452, but in the Middle Ages it was restored and its Patriarchs, powerful prelates in the early Christian Church, ruled all the northeastern Adriatic litteral and, for a number of years, held Fiume as a fief. Under the Austrian rule the population has shrunk to fewer than 1,000.

The discoveries of the archaeologists consist of bas reliefs and mosaics, which from appearance belong to the early part of the first century. From time to time before the war there had been similar discoveries made in the vicinity, proving the whole delta land of the Isonzo and Natisone to have been one of the oldest civilized districts of the Roman world.

Aquileia was founded B. C. 181 as a stronghold against the Celts from the north and also against the Illyrian pirates, which earned it its name of "Watertown" from the Latin "Aquilegia." It became a great centre for the Roman legions, particularly after Marcus Aurelius.

Besides its maritime and military eminence it had gained a great commercial importance owing to its position on the Adriatic Sea and as a central point for traffic routes from the east. As the key to Northeast Italy it was subjected to many sieges, which, thanks to its strong walls, it was able to resist until Attila destroyed it completely.

Sculpture by George de Forest Brush and Others

Art at Home and Abroad

GEORGE DE FOREST BRUSH always has shown the interest of a sculptor in plastic form. He never has painted a picture in which one fails to be fully conscious of the third dimension. His charming, weary, and benignant madonnas translated into marble would lose no essential quality. And now he has made a "Mother and Child" in sculpture; a plaster group intended to be cut in marble. It is on exhibition at the Kingore Galleries, and expresses something of the artist's character and talent that he has not succeeded in putting into his paintings—a greater richness of feeling, a greater freedom and vigor of handling, a more vital interest in the subject.

It is the first work in sculpture ever exhibited by Mr. Brush, and he has worked at it off and on for about thirty years. It is not surprising that it should have outgrown the first neatness of the conception, the definitely bounded and conventional plan, and this one must assume has happened. It has grown into an archaic beauty hardly to be expected from so passionate a student of the Italian Renaissance. The large head, not so Leonardesque as the heads of the painted madonnas, is bent protectingly over the child, which is held with a warm and motherly gesture. The draperies achieve that effect of combined simplicity and richness which is more Greek than Italian and speaks of no meaner inspiration than classic or Renaissance art.

The soft modeling of the child's face—turned with a gay and sweet mischievousness of expression toward the spectator—has exceptional charm. The turn of the little figure also is skillfully and easily rendered. The group as a whole has just this quality of apparent ease, of inevitableness, that can only be the result of fully ripened thought.

Probably the unaccustomed material and technique has something to do with the fascination exercised by the work. Browning had a right instinct when he credited every artist with the wish to do something at least once in his lifetime with a form of art other than that which he had made his own:

"Does he paint? he fain would write a poem—
Does he write? he fain would paint a picture,
Put to proof art alien to the artist's."

And when it happens there is a mingling of naïveté with experience, a kind of fearless battling with new problems and sure conviction of the nature of the desired result, that produces an enlivening effect on the mind of the artist's public, a public that has grown used to thinking him old and finds him suddenly with his youth renewed.

Of course there is a certain freedom and freshness in the plaster that may evaporate in the process of translating the work into marble, but there is no reason to suppose that the finished product will be other than beautiful.

At the new Ferargil Galleries is a Summer exhibition of sculpture by Andrew O'Connor, not the monumental sculptures such as were shown at another gallery a few years ago, but small things and portrait heads lending themselves to intimate treatment. The head of Madame X. in bronze is one of the finer things. The subject was one to inspire a sculptor with the modern sense of the importance of individuality. The delicately irregular nose with its patrician curve, the sensitive eyebrows, one lifted slightly, the beautiful modeling under the eyes, giving the face an aspect of gravity; the somewhat worn look of mature preoccupations and anxieties, and balancing this the youthfulness of the mouth with its lips ever so little parted, and the firm roundness of the chin—all unite to convey an impression of an ardent yet finely balanced nature and a beauty independent of youthful contours. The sculptor has succeeded quite remarkably in preserving a certain spiritual daintiness in this delightful portrait while denying his model nothing of sophistication.

"Mother and Child," by George de Forest Brush. On Exhibition at the Kingore Galleries. (The First Work in Sculpture Ever Exhibited by Mr. Brush.)

Another interesting head is in stone and rather cryptically entitled "The Exile." The modeling is broader and less animated than in the portrait of Madame X., and the features are imbued with a spirit of dignity that gives them something of a monumental character. There is, however, more force and technical restraint in the realistic bronze which is called "The Crooked Smile," and is obviously a portrait study held closely to the character of the original. Here we have again a slightly hooked nose, but the aristocratic note is absent. This striking person with her habit of smiling with one side of her mouth, with her thin nostrils and much dressed hair, her wide lips and eyes set in a curiously flat plane, her conspicuous warts, and somewhat theatrical pose of the head, might have been George Sand or another "intellectual" of a type whose emotions constantly are seeking an outlet, not the companion at once soothing and stimulating of an agreeable drawing room.

With the small half figure entitled "She Dreams" he indulges in symbol without altogether succeeding in communicating the sentiment of his artistic idea. The other small figure, "Armful of Roses," with a Rodin contrast of smooth and rough, is rather negligible, but the "Little Head Bent Down" in marble is enticingly ugly with its bulging brow and the lower part of the face thrust forward to balance it.

There is a note of affectation in the smaller pieces that is absent from the portrait heads, giving almost the impression that the sculptor has forged his own style, has, at all events, asked it to do something quite out of character. His style is formed for naturalness and quietness without sentimentality or any trace of confusion. His "Madame X." establishes the standard, and living up to it is by no means an easy matter.

The other sculptures in the gallery include a bronze head by Daniel Chester French, modeled with a masterly understanding of the beauty of natural forms, and with a lovely simplicity characteristic of this distinguished artist. In comparison with this little mask poised on a slim pedestal and seen to the best possible advantage, everything else in the room, even the admirable "Madame X.," takes on an aspect of conscious invention that keeps it on a plane below that lofty idealism reached by Mr. French with such astonishing certainty of aim and freedom of movement. The features of his little head are full of gentleness and charm. The slight vagueness of the contours is of the essence of modernity. The rendering is lifelike, and there is the amount of detail appropriate to the smallness of the scale, but the nobility of the type and the breadth of the execution make it one of the most beautiful small works in American sculpture.

It is amusing to see in the same collection the plaster effigy of an impudent puppy by Laura Gardin Fraser, but nothing could be more inspiriting to the tired sightseer in New York on a hot holiday than such a riot of pure naturalness as this dog portrait represents. Mrs. Fraser has caught precisely the helpless humorous gesture and pose of a young puppy with nothing but play in his stupid mind.

American sculpture is in a position to affirm its national character in monumental examples, but it is not perhaps in monumental examples that it will most completely reveal itself. A few things—the figure by French for the grave of Mrs. Adams, the "Nathan Hale," by MacMonnies, the Madison Square "Diana"—have both the quality of greatness and that of lovableness, the kind of beauty that has nothing to do with time and place, but calls to human hearts everywhere and in all centuries.

But the small things made for rooms and daily seeing will have much to say of the life of the nation, not of its political and formal life, but of its tastes, its interests, and its indifference. How indifferent it is the critics of the future, when they get to forming their authentic picture of a long past civilization, will discover by the simple process of noting the things we do not do in art. "Had they no games?" they will ask. "Was sport nothing to them? Was bodily health nothing?" And art will answer in her sincere, uncompromising way: "Practically nothing." Remembering our crowds of young and old men in front of the bulletins recording a baseball score, remembering the amount of money and time spent on golf courses and tennis courts, remembering our expensive polo and our democratic football, the contemporary public will shrug its shoulders at such a statement. But if we compare our interest in such sports with that of the Greeks we see at once that it is of a different intensity. Even where the athlete in made the subject of sculpture he obviously is chosen for his anatomical value. His muscles and not the play of his muscles and the use he makes of them are the concern of the sculptor. It is the man and not the sport that interests him. And if we compare the interest for art of athletic sports and dancing we can make no mistake as to the attitude of our American public. Here is something that every one knows about and is interested in and—most important of all—something in which every one takes a personal part. Our sculpture exhibitions have been thronged with dancers—Russian, Greek, plain American. This is the national sport that is not confined to a small, especially trained group, that is not a question of gate money and betting, that is not limited to the rich, that is understood and enjoyed by a great public in all parts of the vast and diverse nation. This is the form of play that has not met with indifference at the hands of the sculptors. It would be very interesting to interrogate a large and representative exhibition of sculpture with the inferences of this future critic in mind, asking the innumerable questions which come to the minds of moderns when they are stirred to interest in the ancients. In that way alone can we see what we are doing.

Selections from a Human Document Penned Through the Weeks

Introducing New York's Dry Season

By T. R. VRAERA.

June 17.

BILL JONES dropped into my office today. He threw himself into a chair in a manner befitting a great tragedian.

"All over in two weeks!" he groaned.

I faced him, smiling. I hadn't the remotest idea what he meant.

"What will be all over?" I asked.

"Freedom!" he wailed. "The cherished rights of the American! The supremacy of the Human Will! The Categorical Imperative! The country will be dry in two weeks."

"Oh!"

Of course. I suddenly remembered. Well, well. It means nothing to me. I'm no slave to drink. A cocktail now and then before the Desert of Sahara opens a New York office," he said. As I saw the poor chap was going to have one anyhow, I thought he would be better off if I went along with him. So I did.

Bill told me he had invested $716 in a stock of booze. "My cellar," he calls the disgraceful conglomeration. He wants me to lay in a stock. Ha, ha! Me! Nothing doing, Bill, old top. Let those who can't get along without the stuff worry about the dry months to come! I'm immune.

Bill had worked himself up into such a state of gloom that when he asked me to have a second Bronx I thought I could get him out of the place quicker if I did. So I did. As a matter of fact, he became quite tractable and followed me out of the place without the slightest objection after our third. I told Betty all about it when I got home, and she understood my attitude in the matter perfectly.

Eight Days More.

them, when I'm a bit tired or want to keep a friend company—that's me.

But Bill Jones is different. Not that the poor fellow is a souse or anything vulgar like that, but he's always talking about booze and always asking you out to "have just one snifter." Bill doesn't realize it, but he's queering himself with his friends. He dragged me out three times last week. Friends don't like to see a chap yield so to a weakness.

June 19.

The way Bill is carrying on about this dry business! You'd think he was to be led out and shot at sunrise on July 1st. His conversation is one great wail. Roughly, his idea is that the country will go dry July 1st, the Bolsheviki will capture Washington July 2d, and the world will end July 3d.

While he and I were sitting over at Corrigan's today—I had twenty minutes to kill before train-time—he remarked:

"Well, it lasted almost exactly one hundred and forty-three years—almost to the day."

"What lasted?" I asked.

"American Independence," answered Bill. "July 4, 1776—July 1, 1919," and he buried his face in a highball. It's awful to get into such a state!

June 20.

I have been rather avoiding Bill Jones since yesterday. But he got me out [illegible]. "Oh, have just one with

June 23.

The last Saturday before the Big Dry Spell!

I got hold of Bill today, intending to lecture him, and we lunched and then we took a little walk and rested up awhile, and then it was so late that I decided not to go back to the office and, as I had some time to kill, we taxied in the park and I missed my train, and I got Betty on the 'phone and for some reason she rang off quite abruptly and I dined with Bill and went to a movie and 'phoned and couldn't get any answer, and then Bill ran into some friends and we had supper and dancing, and I missed the last train and slept at Bill's apartment.

He showed me his "cellar." What a slave! I must lay off that man.

July 1.

Der Tag! Feeling fine. Bill isn't. He dropped in today in utter gloom.

"How about that Bolshevist revolution?" I asked him in the best of humor. "Have you a grand stand seat to watch it from?"

"Watch it!" roared Bill. "I'm going to be IN it. I'm one of millions of American citizens who went to bed normal and law-abiding last night and woke up this morning raging Bolsheviki! Well, anyhow, it lasted almost exactly one hundred and——"

"You've already told me that American independence joke," I interposed. Bill went away crestfallen. Poor fellow! I don't want to hurt his feelings, but I shall have to make him begin to see that I am getting tired of his line of talk.

July 2.

I told Betty about Bill last night, and she quite agrees with me in the line of action I mean to adopt toward him. Why, that stock of his is a disgrace! I got another glimpse of it yesterday when I casually dropped around to his place to return him a copy of "One Thousand Home-Made Drinks" which he insisted on lending to me last Saturday. The bottles are ranged around his apartment like Germans in massed formation. Every label I ever heard of is there, and some I never heard of in my life? Kentucky is represented, and Scotland, and Ireland, and the vineyards of Champagne, and there are at least seven brands of gin and vermouth and applejack and—Betty agreed with me that it was terrible. All Bill needs in order to have a regular bar in his place is a white apron, a footrail, and an Irish accent! Poor Bill!

July 4.

The Glorious Fourth. Feeling fine. The country is free at last! Delighted Betty by drinking three cups of tea this afternoon. My previous record was three-quarters of a cup—after the flu. It's a fine drink—wish I had devoted more attention to it. Read an interesting article about it in the encyclopedia. Wonderful country, China.

Bill, I suppose, is burgling his stock of booze. Poor chap—no philosopher. Absolutely unable to make the best of a situation.

July 5.

Drank three cups of coffee. Read all about how it is grown and marketed. Great country, Brazil.

July 9.

Betty off to the seashore.

July 10.

Accepted Bill Jones's invitation to stay with him at his apartment.

He Showed Me His Cellar.

Half an Hour with Pope Benedict XV.

Recent Visit and Conversation About Public Questions Described by New Yorker Who Had an Audience in the Vatican—A Student of American Affairs

By WILLIAM P. LARKIN,
American Director of the Knights of Columbus Overseas Work.

I STEPPED into the study of his Holiness the Pope, as any humble son of the Church might—a little nervous, but a mighty lot curious, with a great deal of reverence to balance the two. Archbishop Ceretti, the Pope's secretary, introduced Edward L. Hearn of New Rochelle, Overseas Commissioner for the Knights of Columbus, and myself, while Mgr. Tiberghien had the two of us under his wing. We had no sooner passed the picturesque Swiss Guards and gone on through the different magnificent rooms—some of the 7,000 chambers in the Vatican—on through the doorway of the deep but not too imposing study, when Pope Benedict, dressed in white, came toward us, walking as far as the centre of the room from a desk near the window. We met him there, knelt and kissed the Pontifical ring, and then seated ourselves before him, one to the left and one to the right.

My first impression was of a keen, alert personality. There is about Benedict XV. some facial quality that gives immediate notice of the sheer brain-power of the man. He has deep set, snappy black eyes, which look at you intently and then move swiftly to read another face in the group. He has quick little gestures of the hand while speaking, and a rich, nervous voice decidedly pleasant to hear.

The Pope spoke to us in French, rapidly at times, yet it was easy to follow him.

He surprised me with his knowledge of the names of men prominent in New York and other American cities. First of all, he spoke of Archbishop Hayes, with what interest he had followed the career of New York's Archbishop, from the time when he was a parish priest. His Holiness, I found, was most impressed with the future of America. He shared the astonishment of other keen students of the times at the war effort this country had made, and reported that he had heard nothing but words of praise for the American fighting man.

"I have met many of your young fighting men," said the Pope. "The Knights of Columbus Secretaries bring them here for audience. They always impress me with their fine, vigorous youth."

His Holiness then went over certain documents I handed him, giving detailed statistics concerning the war work of the Knights of Columbus. His keen eye scanned each page, and as he read figures under various divisions he ejaculated, "Bene!" and made running comments which showed that this was not the first time he had studied our undertaking. He even knew well many of the Chaplains who had gone overseas in the uniform of the K. of C. He spoke of some of them affectionately by name. I found, too, that his Holiness had heard of the late Joyce Kilmer, poet and newspaper man. He was quite familiar with the fighting tradition of the 69th Regiment. I related to him that Father Duffy, the Chaplain of the 69th, had said, when importuned for an interview, that the reporter could say almost anything in Father Duffy's name, so long as he didn't say anything that might offend the Pope. His Holiness laughed heartily at this, and I had an opportunity to observe his white teeth. Although he is now, I think, in his sixty-eighth year, he shows none of the signs of an old man. He questions with all the eagerness of youth, and when the answer is especially apt, or of the nature of repartee, he smiles broadly and cries, "Bravo!"

The Pope is well aware of the propaganda against the Holy See for its attitude during the war; but he is quite satisfied that time will prove the wisdom and justice of his course, which was one of neutrality throughout and a firm condemnation of the breaking of the laws of war. The official journal of the Vatican has prepared an article stating the Pope's position throughout the war, which, when read in cold blood by many of those who excitably made accusations against the Holy See during the war, will convince them that the Holy Father did everything in his power to mitigate the horrors of war for those poor unfortunates upon whom these horrors fell with unusual violence.

His Holiness was thoroughly acquainted with all that was being said concerning the League of Nations. He did not discuss the League, nor did he discuss the Peace Treaty; but he did applaud warmly the utterance made by Supreme Knight James A. Flaherty of the K. of C. when he lined up the Knights against Bolshevism and all other manifestations of extreme radicalism.

"That danger is not new to Europe," the Pope said. "The war has brought it forward with unusual clearness. I think it is just as much a task for the world to maintain the spiritual integrity of the nations as it is to maintain their physical integrity, for the soul of a nation must enjoy freedom if a nation's body is to thrive. Interference with the spiritual life of a nation would be just as disastrous as interference with its political life."

I was eager for his Holiness to elaborate this thought; I knew that if he did so it would give the world information of value and of deep interest to those watching its peace-making. The Pope reflected for a moment, and then said, quite suddenly:

"You Americans are magnificent at organization. It would be splendid if here in Italy we could have such an organization as you represent."

He spoke of what a good impression the Knights of Columbus Club, next to the Minerva Hotel in Rome, had made upon the Catholics of Rome. He hoped that some such club could be permanently maintained. The people of Rome were profoundly affected, he said, by the soldierly conduct of the American soldiers and sailors who were the guests of the organization in Rome, and this was true of all other parts of Italy where Americans had been located.

His Holiness expressed delight when I told him that Cardinal Mercier intended to visit the United States.

"I am sure America will receive him with open arms," he said.

Then he spoke in general terms of the coming peace. He hoped and prayed it would be worthy of the millions of young men who had perished in order that it might come to the world. Reverting again to his visitors, he spoke entertainingly of Rome, indicating some of the magnificent churches we should visit before leaving. He went on to describe his pleasure in meeting President Wilson, and seemed amused again when I said that America had never had an opportunity to see that meeting registered in the almost ubiquitous movies. The Vatican is about the only place uninvaded by the movie man, who has been in the gardens, but never in the sanctum sanctorum.

The Pope rose, and I remember being surprised at his small stature. During the conversation I had somehow a subconsciousness that I was talking with a man physically as big as his brain.

He gave me a particular blessing for the K. of C. and then praised warmly the vast reconstruction and employment work undertaken by the Knights. He selected some souvenirs from a small bookcase and gave them to Mr. Hearn and myself, inviting us to his private chapel for mass in the morning. Then he playfully bade us "good-morning" in both English and French.

"You are going to be in Rome for some time," he said, "so we shall see much of each other, and the next time we shall talk in Italian."

Outside we read the time as 12:47. We had entered the Papal study at 12:15. On the following morning we attended mass in the private chapel, the most modest little chapel in Rome, contrasting strangely with the great monumental churches with their rich marbles and precious paintings and ornaments. From the Pope's hand we received communion, and after the mass he knelt through another mass of thanksgiving and then passed down the centre aisle of the little chapel, blessing those in attendance.

It was when I had left Rome, when I met Monsignor Ceretti in Paris, that he informed me that the Pope had designated me a Knight of St. Gregory and that Archbishop Hayes would bestow the symbols of Knighthood upon me when I returned.

Ravachol, King of the Anarchists

Case of French Dynamiter Recalled by Recent Bomb Outrages

Delays in bringing to trial persons guilty of bomb outrages and other anarchist crimes and delays in conducting these trials to an issue have perhaps not been more conspicuous than the similar delays in connection with other criminal cases of note in this country.

A striking contrast, however, is furnished in the quick action of the French courts in regard to Ravachol. The bomb outrage in which this man figured occurred in the Spring of 1892.

By JONAS LIPPMANN.

ATTEMPTS to wreck the residences of American officials whose mission it is to protect society brings to memory strikingly similar attempts that occurred in Paris in the Spring of 1892.

The methods of destruction, the motive for killing, and the bombastic literature left on the spot where the explosions took place were identically the same in Paris as in the United States.

In New York the intended victim was Judge Nott, in Washington Attorney General Palmer, both of them selected by the criminals because of their earnest efforts in suppressing insidious propaganda. In Paris Judge Benoit and State Prosecutor Bulot became the target of anarchists on account of their active participation in dealing out justice to those who, as anarchists, attempted to undermine the republican institutions of France.

The same spirit of boastfulness is apparent in the "Plain Words" found by the police in New York as in the notice found by the Paris police in the wreckage of Judge Benoit's residence, which notice read as follows: "Come and get me." Signed Ravachol, King of Anarchists.

Who was Ravachol, the self-styled King of Anarchists, a man whom the police had vainly hunted ever since isolated murders were committed in various parts of France, murders followed by robbery of the victims? The descriptions of the criminal, with his Bertillon measurements, were posted all over the country, and yet not the least clue could be traced toward his capture.

The newspapers and the public became aroused at the apparent incompetency of the police and of the gendarmerie; loud demands were made for the resignation of the Prefect of Police and of the Chef de la Sureté, (Chief of the Secret Service,) but all the clamoring did not bring Ravachol into custody.

One day into one of those cheap restaurants so profusely sprinkled all over Paris, restaurants which in the vernacular of the Parisian are labeled "Marchand de Vin," (wine merchant,) there walked a young man, unshaven and unkempt. It was past the rush hour. The guest sat at a side table and ordered one of those plats du jour so popular in the restaurants of the French capital.

While eating he engaged the waiter in a conversation which soon drifted into politics. The man expressed radical views, cursed the existing state of affairs, ridiculed the French Cabinet, abused the Deputies and Senators, while the waiter to whom he was speaking hardly had a chance to put in a word. Finally the man paid his check and left the place, promising to return and convert the waiter to his ideas.

After he had gone the waiter informed the owner of the restaurant, one Véry, of the strange customer he had served. Suddenly it struck Véry that the man might be the famous or infamous Ravachol. Together they looked up the description sent by the police, and after a careful examination they came to the conclusion that their new patron resembled Ravachol closely.

They kept the secret to themselves. Ravachol—for it was he—true to his promise, came back a few days later and again sat at the same table near the door. Véry had instructed his waiter to serve the man slowly so as to leave time to inform the police.

Véry rushed at once to the nearest police station; an Inspector and half a dozen men followed him to the restaurant. The Inspector alone entered the place, while his detectives were assigned to various posts outside the restaurant in adjacent buildings.

Ravachol did not notice the newcomer, who ordered a light luncheon. The waiter, being busy taking the order, could not engage the man in conversation as on his previous visit. Ravachol paid for his luncheon and left the place. The Inspector followed him immediately and, tap-

The Laying On of Hands for Fingerprints

Woman Expert Thinks System Will Not Be Confined to Criminals, but Will Become Universal —Chinese Used It for Identification Sixteen Centuries Ago

HAVE your fingerprints been taken?

Perhaps you bridle at the question. Probably you think that none but criminals are listed in the fingerprint indexes, and that the procedure is, in consequence, extremely bad form. But the fingerprints of every sailor and soldier serving the United States are on record, and the same is true of most bank employes and all the du Pont employes. In Argentina it is true of every civilian. In time it may be true of all the world.

In cases of unidentified dead, of kidnapping, of loss of memory, of babies exchanged in hospitals, of forged documents, of masqueraders and pretenders for romantic or criminal purposes, consider the value of the fingerprint. No man could drop his old life and begin anew. For by their hands ye shall know them. It is scientifically conceded now that the little ridges at the tips of your digits afford the most conclusive system of personal identification known, and that in all human probability they are infallible. They are unchanged from babyhood to death, and have been observed in Egyptian mummies.

Fingerprints are unalterable, except temporarily by the use of acids, an expedient to which criminals have on occasion resorted. Criminals are learning also to use gloves. They have resisted fingerprinting on constitutional grounds, as giving testimony against themselves, but have been overruled. They have good reason for objecting to the system, and for seeking to evade it. But what reason have you?

Miss Gertrude Meredith Sullender thinks you have no reason. Miss Sullender is the only woman fingerprint expert holding a civil service position in New York City. Mrs. Mary E. Holland, wife of a Chicago detective, was one of its pioneers in this country, and taught the men who established the bureau for the United States Navy. Miss Sullender was a pupil of Mrs. Holland's, who died four years ago. Several other women are now engaged in the work for the Navy Bureau at Washington.

"The popular prejudice against fingerprinting is so great," Miss Sollender said the other day, "that it may be a long while before it is universally applied. It has been valuable chiefly in the detection and conviction of crime, and people as a rule think that is all it is good for. As a matter of fact, it is valuable as much for protection as for detection. It has saved criminals, for instance, when they were falsely accused on account of their bad records.

"I remember that when I was finishing my studies at Washington, in the Navy Bureau, a man came in and asked that his fingerprints be made. He was going to the Far East, and thought something might happen to him there. It was an unusual request in those days, long before the war, and it happened that the man had no occasion to identify himself; but it was evidence even then of an intelligent attitude toward the system.

"We hope some day to see a general appreciation of the advantages of the system. If documents were signed with fingerprints as well as the name, for instance, forgeries would become impossible. It was so that the Chinese used them. A Chinese when he was ready to make his will would call in all the beneficiaries and read it to them, and then ask them to fingerprint it as evidence that they acquiesced in its terms. It was a kind of ritual, but it was an identification also. It must have been hard on the Chinese lawyers.

"A universal fingerprint system would be of constant value, not just to the police, but chiefly to the average citizen. Dr. Juan Vucetich, Chief of the Bureaus of Identification of Buenos Aires and of the Argentine War Department, who visited the United States in 1913, tried to explain to us then how valuable the system was, for they apply it to everybody in Argentina, but it was too new then for him to make a great impression. I believe that in time the public will come to a realization of its advantages."

It was not until 1917 that a society was formed in New York on behalf of general fingerprinting. It was called the First National Scientific Registration Society, and was organized at the home of Mrs. John King Van Rensselaer "for the protection of life and property." But amid the sound and fury of the war it did not make much noise. Bruce Falconer was elected president, and the other officers were duly chosen, and then not much more was heard of it. It may become more active now that the war is done with.

Miss Sullender was a trained nurse before she took up dactyloscopy. Her mother, who is elderly, lives with her, and trained nursing required that she be away from home most of the time. Fingerprinting offered office work with regular hours. That was why she took it up. She wanted to be able to spend her evenings with her mother. But she fell in love with the new work, and even now, after years "in the service," overflows with enthusiasm for it.

It is only to the layman that fingerprints are alike. It cannot be said with scientific accuracy that no prints are identical, for obvious reasons; but among the millions which have been made no two have been found alike. The whorls, loops, and arches of the tiny ridges on your fingers differ from the whorls, loops, and arches on other fingers, and each of your fingers is different. There is a minute system of classifying them, so that they can be cardindexed and found quickly. You may alter your appearance in other ways, as by shaving your mustache, but you cannot alter your finger tips; and they afford evidence more positive than photographs, or even the Bertillon measurements, which detail the bony structure. There was the remarkable case of "dual identity," for instance, in the Federal Prison at Leavenworth, Kan.

Will West, a negro housebreaker, was taken to Leavenworth Prison while William West, convicted of murder, was serving there, and identified the murderer's photograph as his own. The Bertillon measurements, registered in millimeters, (the millimeter is about one twenty-fifth of an inch,) go closely nailed that the men could not have been distinguished with certainty thereby. That is having photographs and the Bertillon measurements, either negro might have been convicted of a crime committed by the other. But their fingerprints were strikingly unlike.

The courts of this and other countries, at first extremely chary of accepting such evidence, now concede that it is the most positive procurable. And not long ago in New York City, N. Y., when John Flood, a taxicab owner, was killed, his slayer was identified not by a fingerprint but by a palmprint!

That was the first palmprint case in which conviction for murder was obtained in a New York court, probably in this country. William Ackerson, a youth of 16, left the mark of his bloody hand on a pillbox he extracted from Flood's pocket in searching for money, and the mark was his undoing. He was sentenced indeterminately from twenty years to life.

The first fingerprint conviction ever obtained in New York was in May, 1911, six years after the system was established. Charles Crispi, one of an organized band of safe robbers, removed a pane of glass from a door leading into a Wooster Street loft. Joseph A. Faurot, Inspector in charge of the New York City Police Detective Bureau, found a fingerprint on that glass, and its duplicate in his files; for Crispi, a mere stripling, boasted a dozen aliases and was an old offender. He confessed on the strength of the fingerprint evidence.

Every once in so often the Occidental world makes what it regards as an epochal discovery, only to find that the Oriental world was first in the field. It was so with the mariner's compass, for instance. It has been so with the fingerprint. The Chinese used it for legal purposes sixteen centuries ago. But in this case we may be said to have borrowed the "discovery" from the Orient, for Sir William Herschel, during his service in India (1858-78) had the foundations of the modern system as we know it laid there. The Chinese had imparted their knowledge to the Thibetans and thence to their more western neighbors, and Sir William used by instruction from the Indians what the Chinese had learned in 500 B. C.

Rashiduddin, the famous Persian historian, wrote in 1303 as follows:

> It is usual in Cathay, when any document is entered into, for the outline of the fingers of the parties to be traced upon the document. For experience shows that no two individuals have fingers precisely alike.

Even earlier testimony was offered by the Arab merchant Soleiman, who wrote in 851 A. D. that in China creditors' bills were marked by the debtor with his middle finger and index; and contracts found in Turkestan, dated 782 and 796 A. D., were provided with the fingerprints of both parties.

TWO years ago Cradock, Va., was not on the map. It was put there by a group of architects and town planners employed by the United States Housing Corporation. There would have been no town if the necessity of whipping Germany had not driven thousands of workers to the Hampton Roads district, which includes Norfolk and Portsmouth.

The entry of the United States into the war brought to a crisis the housing of industrial workers employed in plants engaged in the manufacture of munitions and in the construction of the merchant fleet. The problem was by no means thrust suddenly upon the country. The situation had been critical ever since the European nations had thrown upon the industries of this country some of their tremendous manufacturing tasks.

Soon after we entered into the war the United States Fleet Corporation appealed to Congress for funds to build houses for workers connected with the shipbuilding plants. Sixty million dollars was appropriated. Hardly had this appropriation gone through than the Department of Labor, realizing that success in the manufacture of munitions was equally important, made an investigation of the other new industrial centres of the country, with the result that $100,000,000 was appropriated by Congress to carry on the work of the newly organized United States Housing Corporation.

The housing need in the Hampton district was discovered to be one of the most urgent. The population in and about Norfolk, for instance, had risen from 80,000 in May, 1917, to 170,000 in February, 1918. The additional mass of people had flowed in from all corners of the continent to meet the labor demand at the various Government bases in and about the city. There was a base at the Portsmouth Navy Yard, where ships came in for repairs and overhauling; there was the naval operating base at Hampton Roads, where 10,000 men were trained for the navy; there was one at Lambert's Point, where an engineer's storehouse had been erected; there was one at a place called the Bush Bluff Stores, which was a terminal station of the Quartermaster's Department of the army; there was still another at Pig Point, which was an army ordnance clearing house.

This rapid influx meant a shortage of housing facilities and a consequent rise in rents. Discomfort and discontent were apparent among the workers.

In September, 1918, the United States Housing Corporation turned the problem over to George B. Post & Sons, architects and town planners. Prior to 1914 they had carried through some notable housing developments in connection with industries, such as those at Akron, Ohio, and Beloit, Wis., where the United States Steel Corporation and subsidiary companies had constructed homes and built up cities.

Plans were formulated to meet the requirements of the Hampton Roads district. Due to the unexpected close of the war, the town of Cradock was the only one built. That was constructed on a site about one-quarter of a mile from the Portsmouth Navy Yard on a tract of 457 acres. The situation was ideal in many ways. On the north it was bordered by a stream on the brink of which were large and beautiful trees, on the west by a famous old highway leading to the town of Portsmouth and ferry connections to Norfolk, on the south by the right of way of the Virginia Railroad, and on the east by a trolley line leading into the town of Portsmouth.

The town was built on the plan of the old New England communities. The blocks or streets were built around a large, open square comparable to the town commons. On one side of the square sites were put up for stores; on the other the Town Hall, the firehouse and library were built. A reservation was also made for a community hospital.

The north and south ends of the town were connected by a broad highway, terminating at both ends in two large natural parks. One of these was reserved for recreational purposes; the other was planned as the background for the community schoolhouse.

A careful investigation of the types of workers and their earning capacities showed that there was a need of several different types of houses. The plans finally worked out by the architects and approved by Admiral F. R. Harris, who was the Chairman of the Board of Control of the district, called for about 500 six-room houses, 100 five-room houses, and a small number of seven and eight room houses.

These were built along three plans—detached, semi-detached, and group or terrace houses, the number of houses in a group never exceeding five. The plan of architecture was Colonial. There were forty variations of the style to avoid monotony. Each bedroom has clothes the bedroom floor, a supply closet in the kitchen, and a coat closet in the entrance hall or living room. The kitchens are equipped with tubs and sinks, with cabinets four feet wide, with glass doors, shelves, lower doors and drawers; ranges with hot-water boilers and provision for gas connection to boilers.

Every house is provided with a Summer kitchen, 8 by 10 feet, at the rear of the house. The installation of this room was made necessary by the character of the property. The land is low-lying, and ground water is found at a depth of from four to eight feet, so that the construction of cellars is impossible. The provision of the Summer kitchen allows for the storage of coal, accommodations for gas or oil stove in the Summer, and a refrigerator.

All the houses were supplied with sewer connections, electric light and telephone.

With the signing of the armistice the work, which was not begun until the latter part of July, 1918, was stopped. At that time 550 houses had been built, centring around the town square. All of ment workers. The name Cradock was chosen as a tribute to the British Rear Admiral Christopher G. F. W. Cradock, whose fleet was sunk off the coast of Chile by Admiral von Spee in November, 1914.

The present policy of the Government is to rent houses to employes engaged in the Portsmouth Navy Yard near by. It will not sell to individual buyers or otherwise dispose of the property until Congress fixes upon a general basis for the future conduct of all of the properties controlled by the United States Housing Corporation in various part of the country.

Some thought has been given to the possibility of incorporating the community as a county borough, with its own elective officials, but there are legal difficulties in the way of this step, due to the fact that none of the residents holds title to the homes.

The suggestion has been made that the development at Cradock and similar developments in other parts of the country be sold in their entirety to private corporations. This, however, it is felt in Washington, would open a way for exploitation of the wage earners now living in the houses. Another plan put forth is the one of community ownership such as has been successfully tried out in the English development at Letchworth, a short distance from London. According to this plan the tenants of the houses, by paying a slightly increased rental, purchase stock on installments in a company whose members are the stockholding tenants. In the course of ten or fifteen years each tenant acquires as much stock as is represented in the value of the home and grounds, and at the same time becomes a part owner of the public property, parks, roads, and all the undeveloped land suitable for house building.

Today the rental charges to the tenants of the Cradock development are based on a scale established by the operating division of the United States Housing Corporation. The charges average about $6 a room, a five-room house renting at $25, with slight increases for the larger houses. The maximum charge for a house is $35 a month. The men living in them earn from $20 to $40 a week.

Woman Movement in Spain, Also

One of the First Feminine Graduates of the University of Madrid Explains That It Is, So Far as It Has Gone, Educational Rather Than Political SPAIN'S best hope for the future lies not in her men but in her women."

That is the belief of an ultra-modern young Spanish señorita, Maria de Maestu, who has been sent by the Spanish Government to visit the principal American institutions for the higher education of women. She has been delivering lectures under the auspices of the Hispanic Society of America at the most important seats of learning in the East, and is now preparing to give two graduate courses on contemporary Spain at the coming session of the Columbia University Summer School.

Señorita de Maestu is one of the foremost leaders in Spain's feminist movement. After obtaining from the University of Madrid one of the very first degrees of Doctor of Letters ever given to a woman by that stronghold of male supremacy, she pursued her studies in other European countries and, upon her return to Spain, was placed in charge of the women's educational institutions created by the Spanish Government in 1907 under the Board for the Advancement of Learning. She is, in addition, at the head of the Residencia de Señoritas at Madrid, the only institution in Spain resembling an American girls' college, and likewise of the girls' section of the Instituto Escuela de Segunda Enseñanza, (Secondary Institute School,) established by the same board to try out new methods of instruction for application later in all secondary schools. The Residencia de Señoritas shares buildings with the International Institute for Girls, founded several years ago under American direction, with which it works in close co-operation.

In so far as up-to-dateness and the possession of those qualities which cause a person to be known as a "live wire" are concerned, Señorita de Maestu has nothing to learn from her sisters of this or any other country. As she talked the other day of the remarkable progress made by the woman movement in Spain during the last few years, she was not in the remotest degree the Spanish woman of the kind extremely accepted here-about as typical—she of the Carmen-like airs and graces, of the black mantilla and languorous eyes.

"The movement for the higher education of Spanish women has progressed with astonishing speed in the last ten years," said Señorita de Maestu. "Twenty years ago you could scarcely find a woman student in a Spanish university, although Spanish women have had the right to study for any profession and hold any political office since the promulgation of the 'code of laws of King Alfonso el Sabio, the celebrated 'Siete Partidas,' dating back several centuries. By a curious paradox, it is public opinion which is conservative in Spain, while the laws of the land are liberal. It is public opinion that has kept Spanish women from advancing, not any legal disability.

"The first awakening of the women of Spain was a result of the shock given by the Spanish-American war of 1898. Spain's defeat and the loss of her colonies brought home to Spaniards the necessity of renovation of the national life if Spain was not to sink to a low level among nations.

"The first signs of this awakening were in literature and art. Novelists like Azorin, Baroja and Blasco Ibáñez and artists like Zuloaga and Sorolla were the living proofs that the new Spain had been born. They put into their work a healthy criticism of the Spain of other days, a sense of new values.

"And within this movement arose the movement of the women of Spain toward a higher culture, a better education. And they have gone about it in the quiet, dignified manner that is characteristic of the Spanish race. In Spain we have had none of the violence that was so typical of the suffragette movement in England before the war; none of the stone-throwing and window-smashing with which London became so familiar. As a result of this moderation, I think it may safely be said that our women have advanced far more rapidly and to a greater extent than they could possibly have done had they adopted other tactics. The men of Spain would unquestionably have been antagonized by violence, but, as it is, many of them favor the emancipation of women from the shackles of the past. This is especially true of the young intellectuals of the country.

"You must bear in mind that the feminist movement in my country is not as yet in any sense a political movement. Spanish women, I feel sure, will soon enter the field of politics to compete with men, but up to the present their interest has been devoted to bettering themselves culturally and educationally.

"In seeking to broaden themselves Spanish women are finding an old, disused path rather than making a new one. During the Middle Ages they were probably as advanced as women in any country. In literature we had Santa Teresa de Jesús and Sor María de la Cruz. Nor must we forget Beatriz de Galindo, famous in the annals of Spanish femininity, who was a member of the Faculty of the great University of Salamanca. But our women lost all these privileges later, and by the beginning of the eighteenth century had sunk back to a position of inferiority, which they did not attempt to shake off to any extent until a bare twenty years ago.

"When they knocked once more at the portals of our universities they found favor with several Liberal Ministers. Julio Burell, especially, proved himself their friend, for it was he who remembered the almost forgotten laws of Alfonso el Sabio, admitting women to universities, and caused them, so to speak, to be re-enacted. The creation of the Board for the Advancement of Learning, in 1907, was another important step forward. It paved the way for the establishment by me of the Residencia de Señoritas at Madrid in 1915, which is similar to Barnard, Smith, Vassar, Bryn Mawr and other American girls' colleges.

"It now has seventy pupils. The course of instruction is very advanced. After taking it the girls go to the University of Madrid for examinations. If they pass they are entitled to study at the university quite like the male students. Whereas only a few years ago there was not a single girl student at the Madrid University, there are now about one hundred, and probably twice as many more scattered through the other universities of Spain.

"Since the Institutos de Segunda Enseñanza, like the one with which I am connected at Madrid, have been made available to Spanish girls, thousands of them have enrolled at these institutions and are actively preparing for admission to the universities. At the Madrid institution alone there are now 250 girl students, though it was founded only a year ago. The majority of these expect to continue their studies at the university.

"Frankly, I do not know what the effect will be when these thousands of young women suddenly present themselves for enrollment at the universities of Spain. While they came only in twos and threes, the problem was different and little opposition was aroused. But it may be that their arrival by wholesale may set the men against them.

"I can say, however, that so far the women who have studied at Spanish universities have not had the slightest reason for complaint. The men have invariably treated them with grave respect, in spite of the fact that their presence as co-eds seems to Spaniards of the old school a queer innovation."

Señorita de Maestu was asked at this point about the attitude of the awakened women of Spain toward politics. While emphasizing once more the predominantly cultural and educational character of the woman's movement in Spain, she expressed belief in the possibility of the movement becoming political before long.

"But before it does," she said, "I think that the women of Spain must feel that there is some obstacle in their path that keeps them from obtaining something which they consider vital to their advancement. In other words, they will not demand the vote for its own sake. They will demand it as a means, not as an end.

"The women of Spain do not consider themselves oppressed by men. On the contrary, they have had for centuries a good deal of freedom and their influence on politics, though indirect, has been considerable. In the household they are as often as not in full charge, and it is not at all uncommon for a Spanish husband to return home on pay day and turn over practically all his money to his wife, for her to spend as she deems best. As to business, it is typical of Spain for a widow to carry on her deceased husband's affairs. All through Spain you may see over shops and offices the sign 'Widow of So-and-So.' In fact, I know of no country where it is so common.

"But, as I said, if the women of Spain feel that their political inferiority is keeping them back, they will go after the vote with the same energy and enthusiasm that they have shown during the last ten years in their efforts to get a better education.

"An interesting point about the movement for feminine advancement in my country is that it is almost exclusively confined to the women of the middle class. Those of the aristocracy hold aloof; most of them are too much concerned with frivolity, and the women of the lower classes have not as yet awakened to the possibilities of higher education. The girls of the middle class are excellent raw material. They are intelligent to a remarkable degree, eager to learn, and will constitute a fine bulwark against any reactionary tendencies that may seek to throw Spain back. They are the daughters of physicians, lawyers, and the like, girls who have been accustomed in their homes to books and talk of books. The progress made by these young women has been more rapid, I am convinced, than that of women in any other European country in the initial stages of higher education.

"When women of such a type get to thinking of politics they will, in all probability, consider it illogical that men should have superior rights. But the Spanish woman is essentially conservative; she loves tradition. Though her mind is ready for new thoughts, there is as yet no feeling of rebellion against things as they are.

"There is no feministic movement as yet in politics, no concrete women's political party. Women like myself and a few others may talk about votes for women, but the time is not yet ripe for trying to get political equality. Why hurry? Spain is a country where it does not pay to do things too hurriedly. Should women hurl themselves into politics prematurely they would arouse hatred among Spanish men instead of collaboration.

"The movement to get votes for women will start, I think, in Catalonia, because it is really more European than the rest of Spain, more affected by the same problems that present themselves to other European lands.

"But already the first signs of a desire for political privileges are becoming apparent even in conservative Castille. At the girls' school of which 'I am the head the only man on the premises is an old porter. Every once in a while he tells me and the other teachers and girls that he must go away and vote. Always there is a hullabaloo among the girls.

"'To think!' they exclaim, 'that the only person here who can vote is an old chap who can't read and write!'

"They say it still in a spirit of jest. But tomorrow—who knows?"

Señorita de Maestu also touched on the general situation of Spain, in which, she says, the most serious problems are the tendency toward separatism and international affairs.

"Separatism, or, rather, 'regionalism,' as it is called in Spain, bobs up in every newspaper and every conversation," she said. "Not only in Catalonia but in the Basque provinces and other parts of Spain there is a strong desire for more autonomy, for a new Spain made up of States possessing rights resembling those of the States of the American Union. Only a few extremists talk of actual separation, of new nations to be carved out of what is now Spanish territory; not even men like Cambó, the Catalonian leader, want anything like that.

"Against this desire for autonomy there is strong opposition in parts of Spain like Castille, which feel that the demands of the 'regionalists,' including the right to have languages such as Catalonian and Basque, taught in the schools, is a blow at the very foundations of Spanish nationalism. Despite the bitterness shown by both sides I feel sure that they will come to an agreement without recourse to civil war. There is such a strong opposition, especially among the intellectuals, to the excessive centralization that characterizes the Spain of today that I believe a certain degree of autonomy is sure to be granted to the parts of Spain demanding it.

"As for international questions, the Germanophile elements in Spain are now very much in the background, and there is a strong desire for closer relations with the United States. Just before embarking for America I heard a speech of Count Romanones, then Premier, before the Spanish Cortes or Legislature, in which he strongly advocated a 'union of ideals' between Spaniards and Americans. His remarks were received with much applause."

Unlucky Author of the "Marseillaise"

Monument in Strasbourg to Commemorate the Maker of the Song of the Army of the Rhine That Became France's Hymn

By VICTOR DE KUBINYI.

WORD comes from Paris that the history of "La Marseillaise," the great martial air which breathes the very spirit of French patriotism, is to be commemorated Strasbourg by the erection of a national monument. It will cost $200,000. The Chairman of the committee in charge is Baron de Dietrich, a descendant of Dietrich, the Mayor of Strasbourg, in whose house in 1792 Rouget de l'Isle, then a Captain of Engineers, sang for the first time his "Chant de guerre de l'armée du Rhin."

Rouget de l'Isle was born on the 10th of May, 1760, in Lons-le-Saulnier, and died on the 20th of June, 1836, in Choisy-le-Roi. His parents were Claud Ignace Rouget de l'Isle and Jean Magdalene Guillaude. He was brought up at home, excelling among the schoolboys of his native town. In 1782 he left for the Académie Militaire, and two years later received his commission of Second Lieutenant. Owing to his remarkable abilities he soon attained the rank of Captain, his prospects for a successful military career being undoubtedly bright. The always neatly attired, broad-minded, and polite young man was well liked by superiors and subalterns alike.

When on the 29th of April, 1792, the French National Assembly declared war against Franz II., Emperor of Austria, Rouget was stationed at Strasbourg, which then belonged to France. Dietrich, the Burgomaster of Strasbourg, called the leaders of every profession to a conference to decide upon the necessary preparations. This serious conference wound up into a gay social affair and one of the jovial party remarked how nice it would be if the Army of the Department of the Rhine could march to its own war song. Rouget de l'Isle set about the task and composed on the spot a military song which he called "Chant de guerre l'armée du Rhin."

This is the true origin of the "Marseillaise." Rouget de l'Isle simply composed a special military song for the army corps to which he belonged and his composition was in no way affiliated with the French Revolution. Moreover, Rouget himself did not sympathize with the Revolution, on several occasions expressing disapproval of the execution of King Louis XVI., though he never dabbled in politics and was not even given to discussing political events.

Nevertheless, he became suspect and was forced to quit the important position he was holding as military engineer of the Fortress of Huningue and to resign his rank as Captain. This severe and unjust punishment he suffered not from any fault of his own, but because the revolutionists liked his war song well enough to appropriate it. When the Volunteers of Marseilles attacked the Tuileries, the palace of King Louis XVI., they marched to the tune of Rouget's composition and the populace of Paris became so enthusiastic over this song that they proclaimed it their national hymn, and as in the turmoil they did not know of nor care for its author, it was called simply "La Marseillaise."

After his discharge from the army Rouget de l'Isle concealed himself for a while in Alsace. Then, in October, 1792, he joined the Volunteers of the Ardennes; and the former Captain, who had been so severely punished on political suspicion, prided himself in fighting for his country as a private. General Valence, the Commander in Chief of the Ardennes army corps, on learning of his identity, restored Rouget to his former rank of Captain; but blackmail succeeded in reviving the old suspicion, and Rouget de l'Isle not only lost his commission again, but was sent to the military prison of St. Martin-en-Laye, and, in spite of General Valence's every effort, he was not freed until after Robespierre's downfall, when a new era began in France.

Some time after this sad end of his military career, he composed a political song entitled the "Hymn of Thermidor," which caused much favorable comment and introduced him to the political headquarters of the new dictator, Tallien. His political career was of but very short duration. The call of the battlefield induced him to enlist for a third time. He joined the Central Army of Volunteers. At the battle of Quiberon he showed great gallantry, but, getting seriously wounded, was taken to the hospital with very doubtful prospects of recovery. While Rouget was suffering agonies at the hospital, on the third day of the memorable month of Thermidor, Fréron, one of the new political leaders, brought the case before the National Assembly. We quote from Fréron's speech this passage:

"The National Assembly being about to perpetuate the numerous triumphs of our army, I wish to call your attention to the author of a song which has become our own national hymn, beloved, well-known, and sung by every true patriot, and which may be sung again and often with the same fire of enthusiasm as in the past hard days. We should bear in mind, fellow-citizens, that Rouget de l'Isle, the author of the 'Marseillaise,' was not satisfied with singing for liberty, but he also fought for it with distinguished bravery. He always proved himself a true soldier and a loyal citizen of our republic. Moreover, in spite of the fact that he was deprived of his rank of Captain on mere suspicion, he twice joined our volunteers, thus proving that his resentment at injustice done him was overcome by his love for the republic. Just at present he is suffering for the cause of liberty. I, therefore, move you that the Committee for Public Welfare be charged to grant this noble-minded fellow-citizen of ours an adequate compensation and to restore him in our army to a rank suited to his splendid abilities."

The motion was carried by the Assembly unanimously. Rouget de l'Isle was promoted to the rank of Major, but the compensation was somehow forgotten. The author of the "Marseillaise" naturally felt deeply touched by his reinstatement, but he no longer desired a military career. He left the army a very poor man, making a scant living as a third-class office clerk. While copying the manuscripts and letters of strangers he came into very close touch with misery and suffered hardships for a number of years. Finally, in 1830, Louis Philippe, the "Citizen King," provided for him, granting him a life pension of 1,500 francs and also making him Knight of the Legion of Honor. A little later Beranger, the famous poet and Rouget's close friend, took no little trouble to effect the increase of his pension to 2,000 francs a year. With this Rouget de L'Isle left for Choisy-le-Roi, a quaint little village, where he settled down, devoting all of his time to poetry and music and spending all of his money on the poor.

Baron de Blein, a retired General of Napoleon's army, living on his comfortable estate in the vicinity of Choisy-le-Roi, was a former comrade in arms. They had served in the same company, fought several times side by side, and Blein proudly planned to help to make his friend's life comfortable, but Rouget was proud. He preferred poverty to sympathy. The more anxiety Blein showed to give proofs of his friendship the more reserved Rouget became, being honestly ashamed to accept his former comrade's assistance.

Their attitude is reflected in Blein's own words:

"Seriously, several times I have found my friend almost starving. He spent all his money on the poor while he himself was often lacking daily food. One nasty evening in the Winter when calling on him I was much shocked to find him eating his dinner in his unheated, dark room. And what do you think he had for 'dinner'? A piece of dry bread which he soaked in water to make it edible. I implored him to share the comforts of my home and pleaded with him, telling him how much more he could do for his poor when restored to good health. He hardly noticed my pleadings and reluctantly said he did not mind his own poverty and that the only comfort he craved was that of being able to help the poor. At last I lost patience with him. 'I want you to understand,' I said, 'that a General of Napoleon's army is addressing you. Major, I certainly hope you still remember the law of obedience. I command you to follow me. To my great delight he came, but did not enjoy the comforts of my home, and the desire to help the poor soon drove him back to his dingy room."

Often the two men crossed the streets of Choisy-le-Roi arm in arm, recalling the past, and the villagers, reverently lifting their hats, said: "Look, there goes the Grand Army." They all knew them. A stranger certainly would not have guessed that the tall, slender man, in his old-fashioned, shabby coat, was the author of the "Marseillaise."

None of Rouget's many biographers did him justice. They thought he was simply a poor "rhymer" who once got an unexpected inspiration. As a matter of fact, Rouget de l'Isle was a very able writer and musician, the "Marseillaise" being but one of his admirable compositions.

On the 27th day of June, 1836, General Baron Blein had his last opportunity to do something for his friend by giving him a fitting burial. Rouget's body was laid in the General's garden until his grave was adorned with a suitable epitaph. In 1882 the remains of the author of the "Marseillaise" were removed to the public cemetery of Choisy-le-Roi and his last resting place was marked by a stone monument.

EXCELLENT FICTION FOR SUMMER READING

A Striking Novel With a Supernatural Element by Mrs. W. K. Clifford—Latest Fiction by Irvin Cobb, Roland Pertwee, Michael Wood, and Others

By WILLIAM LYON PHELPS

MISS FINGAL. By Mrs. W. K. Clifford. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.50.

NEARLY thirty years ago Mrs. Clifford published a short work of fiction, "Love Letters of a Worldly Woman," that deservedly attracted universal attention. It exhibited admirable literary art, and unusual skill in the analysis of character. Since that time she has written many novels, short stories, sketches, and dramas, all of them showing the trained hand of the expert, but none of them equaling either in reputation or value the book mentioned above. Now, when many of her admirers felt that there was nothing new or strange to be expected from her, she surprises us all by producing the best work in her whole career, "Miss Fingal."

Mrs. Clifford's husband was a man of genius, who, in a short life, contrived to make an amazingly powerful impression on the world of society and on the world of thought. He was a mathematician and a philosopher, cut off at the age of 33, whose conversation was so brilliant that people in London talk about him still, though he died forty years ago. He was married to Lucy Lane in 1875, and, although Mrs. Clifford had only four years of married life, the marriage was so ideal in happiness and intimate companionship that it has given our novelist a brave and buoyant heart through forty years of widowhood. As the Dictionary of National Biography says, "His marriage was a source of unmixed happiness." Everything that she has written during this long period has been written under the inspiration of her husband, which may partly account for the spiritual atmosphere of "Miss Fingal," where supernatural influences direct the lives and actions of the chief characters.

Mrs. Clifford's home in London is a centre of literary life, and she has been unselfish and generous in helping younger writers. It is pleasant to think that in the year 1919 she has produced her own masterpiece, one of the best novels of the last few years.

This is a good story well told. It is not a plotless autobiography. It is not a treatise on education or socialism. It has a beginning and a conclusion. Its characters are real people, whose conversation and behavior are natural. The heroine is original, unlike any other person in fiction that I can recall, and yet recognisably true to life. Long years of obscurity unconsciously developed her, so that when she was translated from Battersea to Bedford Square she was equal to the situation.

The great war is brought into the story toward the end, but this is by no means a war book. The interest of the reader is centred on Miss Fingal, and she is so interesting that the phrase "not a dull page" is literally true.

The most striking quality in this novel is the supernatural element, by which I do not mean the miraculous. We should have to go back to Hawthorne to find such an atmosphere—an atmosphere in which Miss Fingal breathes and lives, which is never turned on and turned off, never "dragged in." It is an integral part of the story, and could not possibly be detached from it.

The character of Miss Fingal is a resultant of spiritual forces—voices from the dead speak to her, beckon her, draw her irresistibly. In the same way, she is attracted to living persons by powers that are stronger than her own will, but which are represented with such skill that they seem real and convincing.

This is an excellent novel, displaying both artistic dignity and nobility of motive.

THE WHITE ISLAND

THE WHITE ISLAND. By Michael Wood. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co. $1.90.

THE unusual and striking spiritual quality of this story will appeal to all who are interested in that wall, so thick and dark and forbidding to some and so attractive and almost transparent to others, which separates the immediate, tangible world from the possible, the imagined, perhaps even the immanent, world of the spirit. For its central character is one who seems to live upon both sides of that veil, and to be more concerned with the sanctions of the world of spirit than with the ideas and activities of the world of human beings. Moreover, the story is told with such skill, such simple dignity, such spiritual refinement, and, at the same time, such understanding and appreciation of ordinary life that it pleases and interests for its own sake, and does not repel or shock by morbid mysticism or an excess of weirdness or unreality. An atmosphere of beauty and of spiritual peace broods over the story that ought to make it welcome to overwrought minds and disturbed souls in this chaotic and menacing time. It will also win the praise of the discriminating because of the literary skill with which the atmosphere is created.

The story is told in the first person by a certain Father Anthony Standish, who is the head of a semi-religious retreat, a beautiful place with a guesthouse, to which comes now and then some one in need of peace, seclusion, and an unobtrusive atmosphere of spiritual ideas and aspirations. In the first chapters the reader meets a quaint little boy, René Clinton, who lives almost wholly in a world of his own fancy, a world wherein "White Island," which is very real to him, is an important feature. Then the tale jumps more than a dozen years, and the mother of the little boy, grown to a young man of 20, brings him to stay with Father Standish, because his presence in the home is too great a pain for her husband, who had built all his hopes and ambitions upon the lad. And apparently the boy is a victim of arrested mental development, for he cannot learn and is not interested in the ordinary tasks of school and college, and is entirely negligent of the usual affairs of life. The greater part of the story deals with the happenings at Father Standish's retreat during the next few years, the first years of the world war. Several men and women pass in and out of the tale, the narrative every now and then brushes the skirts of tragedy, and there are situations of tense emotion. The final chapter tells of a vision through which the boy's father and also Father Standish gain a clearer understanding of René's place in the world. Afterward Father Standish writes to his niece, for whose benefit he has told the tale: "Therefore I say we do not know enough to doubt; we only know enough to believe."

LIFE OF THE PARTY

THE LIFE OF THE PARTY. By Irvin S. Cobb. Illustrated. George H. Doran Company. 90 cents net.

THE adventures of a respectable and prosperous gentleman, no longer in the heyday of youth, and occupying a more or less dignified position in the community, who by some extraordinary freak of fortune is driven to wander forth insufficiently clad or costumed in garments of strange hue and stranger fashion, have been related many times and by diverse humorists. But never, unless we are very much mistaken, have the adventures been more fantastic or more amusingly related than are those of Mr. Algernon Leary, who during one wild and event-

MR. VANDERLIP DESCRIBES WHAT HAPPENED TO EUROPE—AND WHAT IS LIKELY TO HAPPEN

WHAT HAPPENED TO EUROPE. By Frank A. Vanderlip. New York: The Macmillan Company.

BETWEEN Feburary and May Mr. Vanderlip toured seven countries concerned in the world war. In his travels he had the guidance and counsel of Ministers of State, famous financiers, and others too numerous to mention. He lists many, and quotes none of them, for he took no notes, and did not intend to publish anything. The world would have been poorer if he had not spent five days of his voyage in dictating a book which is unique and supreme in its class. There have been many and admirable books on the causes and conduct of the war. Soldiers, diplomats, travelers, reporters of all degrees, have had their say, but this is the first book to give Americans an insight into what the future has in store for them as a duty to relieve distress, and an opportunity of profit through service surpassing any nation's in history until now. Mr. Vanderlip sugarcoats nothing. He describes the distress with restraint, but so vividly that he leaves no one in doubt as to its depth and reality. And he makes it clear that there is no relief near, the misery for 1920 surpassing all but that of the fighters this year. Nothing which can be done can supply the belligerent countries with food from their own resources this year. Neither can they pay for what others must supply them, or they perish. If they raised the food, or if it were given them, it could not be distributed. Europe faces famine such as it has not known since antiquity, and whites face death such as only the colored races have known for centuries. Millions are supported by tax money distributed by several countries which cannot bear the strain and remain solvent. They are unemployed partly because it is impossible to obtain the materials of industry for lack of ships, partly because the factories have been destroyed in several countries, partly because the war has demoralized character as well as industry and transportation. It is a dreadful picture of "a terrible catastrophe" to be drawn by so sober a witness.

England, Italy, France, Spain, Belgium, each receive a chapter individually regarding their finances and industries. The treatment is sympathetic, often flattering, yet critical. The labor troubles of England are not blinked, but if only labor and capital settle their differences there is a prospect of production "on a scale which will make the present scale of production seem indicative of a period of the dark ages of industrialism. If that hope is realized, the future of England's industry is brought beyond anything ever dreamed of." The finances of France are described, but comment is omitted because it would be "brutal." Italy's condition is similar, and its prospects depend upon financial help from outside. The dark spot on the prospects of Spain are a sort of industrial mafia dwarfing our I. W. W. and even approaching the Bolsheviki. But Spain has great resources, and is well disposed toward the United States, the past being forgiven. Belgian industry cannot be revived in three years, even if all goes well. The population has lived for four and a half years of war in semi-idleness, and has come to think that normal, even more desirable than work. "The deterioration of the moral fibre of her common people" is Belgium's greatest injury, but the combination of Belgian business capacity and experience with American capital would benefit both parties. In summary, there is not in all Europe any national credit above suspicion. In England the situation is "difficult"; in all "critical"; in "Poland, Lithuania, Czechoslovakia, Jugoslavia, Greece, to say nothing of Germany, Austria, Turkey, the situation presented in each case is desperate." There is no political safety in Europe so long as its various countries cannot command capital or credit to start industries in each and all of them. People who cannot eat turn Bolshevist before they die, and Bolshevism anywhere is a menace everywhere.

It must not be thought that this is an excuse for our turning our backs on Europe. It is a summons for us to rescue a situation which is capable of being saved, partly as a duty to mankind, and partly from the hope of profit by service. With industrial revival Europe's credit is good for all that the lending nations can advance. Europe has the industrial plant, the commercial organization, and experience which we lack, and which needs only our capital to provide rich profits.

> American bankers have an opportunity in the field of world banking brilliant beyond any conception which they have heretofore had. If they will rise above the provincialism in which they have been trained and still hold firmly to the principles of sound commercial banking, the rôle which they will play in the future world of finance has no limit that I can see.

In a chapter on "Comfort and Liberty," the motto of the great French union, there is given an account of the labor situation in England and France which is both sympathetic and optimistic. Capital has been humanized and labor has a capacity for social feeling, which is something different from either Bolshevism or socialism. What has kept labor and capital apart is what has been a stumbling block with us in regulating their relations—suspicion. The demand for a "new social order" springs from suspicion that capital gets more than its share of the product of their co-operation. That portion of labor which resists compromise does so because all concessions to labor are regarded as sops thrown to labor to divert or confuse working-class aspirations. This portion of labor is not large, but it is strenuous and unprincipled to an extent which makes the rule of the minority in Russia a warning to countries complacent in the idea that the majority rules under their better institutions, and that therefore the minority has no excuse for going to extremes. "America should beware of the power of minorities." In a chapter on the "World's Financial Centre" he answers "yes" for the first time to the frequent question whether that is New York's destiny, and gives his reasons. His chapter on the method of financing Europe is interesting, but is only one of several, and seems to have been anticipated by the negotiators at Versailles. Mr. Vanderlip thinks that Germany's indemnity would not be good security for either nations or individuals, from the difficulty of enforcing default. For that reason he would have the credits arranged between groups of bankers, and guaranteed by pledge of taxes, in the manner of Chinese loans. But that leaves the indemnity's disposition unsettled. Probably Mr. Vanderlip when he wrote was not aware that the League of Nations proposed to hold Germany's bonds, and to issue to the nations individually beneficial certificates. That should be as good security as the pledge of revenue by most of the nations, and it would be the duty and function of the League to enforce payment.

It would have been difficult to write a book on such topics which it would be easier to read. Whoever is interested in them will hardly take it up without reading it through before laying it down. It would take only an evening, and the man who would not be enlightened is rare indeed. There is plenty of evidence that the author wrote while he ran, or rather dictated while he sailed. But his touch has been so sure that labored corrections might have blemished his easy, almost conversational style. The style of the press is open to remark, as well as the style of the writer, for there are slips which would be more seemly in newspapers, which are printed in hours, whereas this book went to press in days.

WITH AUTHORS AND PUBLISHERS

JUST in time for the climax of the discussion on the League of Nations, which will wage more fiercely than ever during the next few weeks, will be a book to be called "The Covenanter," which Doubleday, Page & Co. announce for publication the first of next week. It will contain a series of articles written by William H. Taft, George W. Wickersham, A. Lawrence Lowell, and Henry W. Taft, which will make a thorough exposition of the principles embodied in the covenant and will answer the objections of the League's opponents. Readers of THE NEW YORK TIMES will remember that these lucid, concise, and illuminating articles recently appeared, running from day to day for some time, on the editorial page of that paper.

Harry A. Franck, who has been making a tour of observation in Germany, returned to the United States a week ago. Traveling most of the time on foot and mingling intimately with the people everywhere, he went from Coblenz to Berlin, thence through South Germany, on into Prussia, over the border into Poland, back to the Rhine and then to Berlin again. The chronicles of his observations and experiences are appearing serially in Harper's Magazine, having begun in the July number. After serial publication the Harpers will bring out the articles in book form. During the war Mr. Franck was a Lieutenant in the cavalry arm of the A. E. F., but was assigned to duty in the base censor's office in Paris because of his knowledge of many languages. After the signing of the armistice he was made liaison officer with the French in the Army of Occupation, whence he started on the 1st of March upon his tour of Germany.

Mrs. Gene Stratton-Porter, writing of her enjoyment of "The Education of Henry Adams," said that one very distinct impression she got from the book was, "What a charming occupation being Mrs. Adams would have been!" Doubleday, Page & Co. announce for Aug. 15 a new book by Mrs. Stratton-Porter that will be concerned with the thousand and one odd and curiosity provoking peculiarities of birds and bird life that she has found during the many years she has been a bird student. Among the questions she brings up and upon which she recounts her observations are: Do birds have a sense of humor, do they sometimes get drunk, and do some of them show a disposition to travel de luxe?

"Germany's New War Against America" will be the title of a volume by Stanley Frost, to be brought out in the latter part of July by E. P. Dutton & Co., which will set forth the methods Germany has already begun to put into action for the same kind of "peaceful penetration" of this country in which she was so expert and so successful before the war.

"The Problem of the Pacific," by C. Brundson Fletcher, will be published this week by Henry Holt & Co. In its comprehensive survey of the significance of the Pacific Ocean in present-day world affairs there will be chapters on Japan's relation to the Pacific, on German plots, and on the comparative influence of the United States and Great Britain on Australia.

Boni & Liveright announce a change in the publication policy of their Modern Library Series by which, instead of bringing out a number of new volumes each Spring and Fall, they will publish two or more new titles every month or so. Four of the eight new titles which they are bringing out this Spring have just been issued, and four more will appear at the end of this month. Among them are included Gertrude Atherton's "Rezanov," W. L. George's "A Bed of Roses," and Tolstoy's "Redemption and Other Plays."

Dodd, Mead & Co. report that Ralph Waldo Trine's "In Tune with the Infinite" has been translated into eighteen languages and that over half a million copies of the book have been sold. Of Mr. Trine's "The Higher Powers of Mind and Spirit," which they have just published, a second printing has been necessary and a British edition has already been published in London, a Swedish edition in Stockholm, and a French edition in Geneva, while Danish and German translations are being prepared for publication in Copenhagen and Stuttgart.

Writing from London in the June Bookman, Simon Pure vouches for the authenticity of W. N. P. Barbellion's "The Journal of a Disappointed Man," which critics and readers are guessing may have been written by H. G. Wells, who contributes an introduction to the work. The name over which the volume is published is, he says, a pseudonym, but the story it tells is the real story of a real man who is in reality a dying man. Simon Pure says that he was with Wells when the latter was reading the manuscript.

Henry Campbell Black, editor of the Constitutional Review, whose work on "The Relation of the Executive Power to Legislation" will be published in the early Fall by the Princeton University Press, has recently written a pamphlet dealing with Bolshevism in the United States and bearing the title "The Enemy Within Our Gates." An edition of 100,000 copies of the pamphlet is being distributed by the National Security League.

Houghton Mifflin Company announces that Josephine Preston Peabody's poetry play, "The Piper," has reached its twenty-first edition. It started its career by winning the Stratford prize in 1910 and has since been translated into many languages and has achieved popularity upon the stage in the United States, England, and other countries.

Next Fall the Macmillan Company will publish "The War with Mexico, 1846-1848," by Justin H. Smith, author of "The Annexation of Texas" and formerly Professor of Modern History in Dartmouth College. The work will contain a great amount of new material from the diplomatic and military records of both belligerents, never examined before, from local archives, the vaults of historical societies, private collections, and the archives of other countries. From all the new data, many times as much as has been available heretofore, important facts have been revealed.

READ FOR INSTANCE Conrad in Quest of His Youth With a Preface by JAMES M. BARRIE

The Evening Public Ledger, Philadelphia, says:—

"It is comedy with the revelation of the tragedy, which always lies just below the surface, yet comedy from beginning to end, sparkling, brilliant, humorous, and, actuated by genuine sentiment which never sinks into slobbering sentimentality. . . . There is an evening of delight in prospect for every lover of fine things who is so fortunate as to get hold of the book."

The New York Times Book Review comments:—

"More even than the wit and the irony, the sparkle which is as gay and as French as champagne, the exquisite style and unfailing deftness of plot, it is his extraordinary ability to make even the least important of his characters real human beings, that renders Mr. Merrick's stories so very exceptional."

Cynthia Just Ready

Introduction by MAURICE HEWLETT.

Ostensibly the study of the career, emotional as well as professional, of a young author, "Cynthia" really portrays the inner growth of the girl he married. As no writer can draw with more stimulating charm the frothy surface of life, so no modern novelist has shown more surely than Mr. Merrick does here the ability to probe deeply into the real selves of his fellow beings.

"Cynthia" s a masterpiece in the analysis of the soul of a lovely woman.

The Actor-Manager Ready

Introduction by W. D. HOWELLS, who says:—

I can recall no English novel in which the study of temperament is carried further or deeper, allowing for what the people are, and I do not remember a false line or a mistaken color in it . . . In an age of intensely feminized fiction he is one of the first of these who know how to catch the likenesses, to the last fleeting expression, of women, and especially women of the theatre. It is, in every way, the best of Mr. Merrick's stories, so far as I know them.

ARTHUR PINERO says: The issue of a Collected Edition of the works of Leonard Merrick is a matter for special rejoicing; for, with it, this most accomplished and unobtrusive of narrators may be said to have come into his own.

JAMES M. BARRIE says: There have been many "authors editions," but never, so far as I know, one quite like this, in which the "author" is not the writer himself but his contemporaries who have entirely "engineered" the edition themselves, and have fallen over each other, so to speak, in this desire to join in the honor of writing the prefaces. Such is the unique esteem in which Mr. Merrick is held by his fellow-workers.

ful night was most successfully and uncomfortably "The Life of the Party." The beginning of it all, however, was certainly pleasant enough; for that beginning was Mrs. Carroway's highly enjoyable children's party; it was, in other words, a party to which all the guests came in juvenile costume, representing children from 1 year old to 12. Many of these costumes were much approved and applauded, the most loudly acclaimed of all of them being that of the aforesaid Mr. Algernon Leary, a rising lawyer, aged 37, who appeared as "Himself at the Age of 3." At the age of 3 Mr. Leary, it would seem, had worn rompers buttoned up the back, of a vivid watermelon pink, with white silk socks encircled by pink garters, which left his knees bare. It was a picturesque get-up, which at the age of 3 one might, no doubt, wear without acute discomfort, and even perhaps with a not inconsiderable degree of self-satisfaction; but as a costume in which to wander, penniless, through the purlieus of old Greenwich Village during the small hours of the morning, it might truthfully be said to leave much, very much indeed, to be desired.

This picturesque if unconventional garb was, as has been said, greatly admired by Mrs. Carroway's guests; but other and less enlightened persons felt quite differently about it. The joyous members of the Lawrence P. McGillicuddy Literary Association and Pleasure Club, Policeman Switzer, that stern guardian of the honor of the force, and Mrs. Edward Braydon's maiden aunt, for instance, though unlike in their ways of expressing their opinions, were all agreed that it was far from being the sort of thing any sane and respectable individual would wear under any imaginable combination of circumstances. Which was certainly hard on Mr. Algernon Leary. But most of the events of that night were as hard on the excellent Algernon as they are amusing to the reader—which is saying a very great deal. The story is told gayly, Mr. Cobb apparently enjoying the telling to the very utmost. There are few things in this world of a more unmitigatedly depressing quality than the average would-be comic story, but this little tale is really and honestly funny—though no one who either in nightmare or reality has ever wandered out in grotesque or insufficient garments will fail to sympathize with Mr. Algernon Leary's plight, even while in the midst of chuckling over it.

STORY WITHOUT A NAME

THE STORY WITHOUT A NAME. By Barbey d'Aurevilly. Brentano's.

A TRANSALATION of Barbey d'Aurevilly's gruesome "Story Without a Name" is here presented as one of the offerings of Brentano's Lotus Library of novels. It is a remarkable tale, the history of a tragedy which completely wrecked the lives of two women. Mother and daughter, these two were completely unalike in personality and character, the one strong and stern, passionate, proud, and austere; the other sweet and gentle, innocent, fragile, and submissive. They lived in an old château in a tiny hamlet in the Cevennes, entirely shut in by the mountains, where the sunlight scarcely ever penetrated. There they led lives of the quietest and most secluded kind imaginable. Mme. de Ferjol had been madly in love with her husband, and after his death remained steeped in melancholy, becoming, too, extremely devout, and living in cloistral severity with Lasthénie, her only child. She adored this lovely daughter of hers, but never unbent to her, showing her always "a sort of rigid majesty" which repelled all confidences and all demonstrations of affection. So Lasthénie was really quite alone, walled in and surrounded by melancholy, without a friend or companion of any kind. Then presently there came to the château that wandering Capuchin preacher who brought tragedy with him.

This tragedy, whose development the tale relates, is of a peculiarly close and intimate type, the more awful indeed for its very closeness and intimacy. These two women who lived together as in a tomb, suffering through and by each other, are figures of horrible anguish. The way in which the mother, even while loving her daughter, and herself suffering intensely because of that daughter's pain, slowly tortures the helpless and wretched girl, first into semi-idiocy, and then to death, is depicted by a master hand. Horrible, revolting almost as the story is, it is nevertheless a work of art, a fragment of literature. Given the characters and the situation, one feels the outcome to have been inevitable. And it is not possible easily to forget the pictures the author places before our eyes—the melancholy house in the Cevennes, with its great and fatal staircase, the mother standing beside her daughter's bed with lamp and upraised crucifix, the two agonized women seated together in the window embrasure, and last, but not least memorable, that awful concluding scene of the old woman standing, rigid and implacable in her just hatred, above the open grave of the criminal for whose sin no penance could atone. The novel has been translated by Edgar Saltus, who prefaces it with a strained and very "mannered" introduction.

WOLVES

WOLVES. By Alden W. Welch. Alfred A. Knopf. $1.40 net.

THIS is a first novel, and one, moreover, possessed of no small degree of promise—promise which shows itself in the portrayal of the principal character, and in many of the incidents through which the tale is developed. The conclusion, too, is one for which we are grateful, not because it is especially dramatic or particularly memorable, but because the author has resisted the temptation to use the hero's love affair as a means of transforming his character and suddenly endowing him with contentment and all the other virtues. In itself, the story is one of those attacks on the ways and methods of "Big Business" which have become somewhat wearisomely familiar. Henry Congreve, father of Erich, the hero, had been shamefully cheated by a man he trusted, and thereby lost the chance of a fortune. He had invented a steam shovel, but was so rash as to show his design to one Arthur Windham, who stole the idea, patented it, and made a fortune out of it. Henry Congreve tells this story to his son Erich as an object lesson, and Erich, who is a boy of an ambitious, forceful, dominating type, vows vengeance on Windham. Some years later, under the name of Henry Carson, Erich contrives to become Arthur Windham's private secretary, plots to bring about his downfall, and by the use of methods utterly unscrupulous succeeds not only in destroying Windham and Windham's business, but in mounting to fortune upon the wreckage. There are two young women in the book, but the love story is entirely secondary to the business interest, both in the plot and in the hero's life.

Erich Congreve is well drawn, and the author succeeds in making the reader feel that he actually has the cleverness and force of character with which he is credited, and believe that when he does get to New York, the "Mighty Clearing" in the very heart of the forest which is the haunt of the "Wolves"—"We're all wolves or wolf-cubs, we business men," he declares—he will prove more than able to hold his own. Several of the minor characters also are well done, and the incidents of the tale are worked out with a good deal of deftness. The style is often stiff and occasionally a little awkward, but these are defects which time and care and hard work will doubtless overcome.

OUR WONDERFUL SELVES

OUR WONDERFUL SELVES. By Roland Pertwee. Alfred A. Knopf. $1.75 net.

ALTHOUGH Mr. Pertwee's book is announced as a first novel, it has few of the faults usually found in such literary débuts. Told in the leisurely manner generally preferred by English novelists, it does not drag, nor is it overlong, while the style has that ease and flexibility which is rarely attained save after a long and faithful apprenticeship—all of which leads one to the conclusion that although this is Mr. Pertwee's first book, he is by no means a tyro in the art of writing fiction. The plot, too, is smoothly and logically worked out, and the development of Wynne Rendall, its principal character, is natural and interesting. From the first his is the centre of the stage, and he contrives to hold his position even after he is obliged to share it with the charming Eve. Thus, the reader's sympathy quickly shifts from Wynne to Eve, and there is also certain rather unfortunate alteration of viewpoint which results in a marked break in continuity. Until his marriage, it is through Wynne Rendall's eyes that we see the events and incidents of his life; afterward, we look at them through those of Eve, and that to the very end. Somewhat to one's disappointment, the book closes with the rather forced bringing about of what is conventionally known as a happy ending, though it is not, generally speaking, written in conventional fashion, while the reader cannot help having grave doubts as to the sort of husband so selfish and absolutely self-centred a man as Wynne Rendall could be expected to make. It would scarcely seem as if the beneficent effect of the change in his relations with Eve would prove more than temporary.

The story begins with Wynne Rendall's birth, and carries him through childhood and school days. Then, while still only a boy he is abruptly thrown on his own resources and goes to Paris where, for a the convictions of christopher sterling

by Harold Begbie, Author of "Twice Born Men"

This is the story of a man who was so faithful a servant to his conscience that he followed it even when it brought him into conflict with all else that he held dear and sacred. It is the story of a conscientious objector—a Quaker—who hated war sincerely and passionately and who could not compromise with this hatred when faced by the supreme crisis of our age.

Christopher Sterling, the central character of the book, represents a class that is numerous, widely discussed and little understood, and it is as an interpretation of one of this class and not as a special plea for their beliefs, that this book has been written. It is published because, as a story of human emotions and experiences, it has a powerful appeal and because it contributes to an understanding of a type which has been and will probably continue to be of great political and social importance. $1.50 net.

QUERIES AND ANSWERS

F. N.—Will you please print the old rhyme "Oranges and Lemons," which is the tune to which British children play one of their most popular games?

The ancient rhyme asked for by our correspondent is one which the famous peal of bells in St. Clement's Church in the Strand, London, has chimed for so many years. This tune is said to have originated from the time, many years ago, when the servants in the neighborhood of St. Clement's Church visited all the lawyers' offices and rooms in Clement's Inn, and presented oranges and lemons to the tenants, while the bells in the church rang out the tune. The verses sung by the children of London in playing the game of "Oranges and Lemons" are as follows:

"Oranges and lemons," says
The Bells of St. Clements.

"You owe me five farthings," says
The Bells of St. Martins.

"When will you pay me," says
The Bells of Old Bailey.

"When I grow rich," says
The Bells of Shoreditch.

"When will that be," says
The Bells of Lea.

"I do not know," says
The Great Bell of Bow.

John Flavel's Sermons

JAMES Q. MOORE.—I have an old copy of a book of sermons by John Flavel, a Nonconformist minister of Dartmouth, England, who died in 1691. Can you give me the dates on which some latest editions of Flavel's sermons were printed, and also a brief sketch of the author?

John Flavel, Presbyterian divine, was born in or about 1630 at Bromsgrove, England, and died in 1691. He was the eldest son of the Rev. Richard Flavel. He was four times married. He was a voluminous and popular author. Collected editions of his works were issued in 1673, 1701, 1754, and 1797. Charles Hadley edited a selection in 1823.

"Pictures from Italy"

F. F. H.—Will you please give approximate values of the following, all first editions:

"Pictures from Italy," Charles Dickens.
"Gareth and Lynette," &c., Tennyson.
"Enoch Arden," &c., Tennyson.
"The Poet's Pilgrimage to Waterloo," Southey.
"Abbotsford and Newstead Abbey," Washington Irving.
"The Poetical Works of the Late Thomas Little, Esq.," (Thomas Moore,) eleventh edition.

"Pictures from Italy," first edition, 1846, brings at auction from $4 to $10. "Gareth and Lynette" seems not to be of special value. "Enoch Arden," first edition, London, 1864, in binding by Zaehnsdorf, brought $16 at the Huntington sale in 1917. We do not find any record of a sale of "The Poet's Pilgrimage to Waterloo" or of "Abbotsford and Newstead Abbey." The eleventh edition of Moore's "Poetical Works" does not seem to be of special value.

"The Woman in White"

OLIVIA FOUNTAIN.—Will you please tell me the value of a first edition of Wilkie Collins's book, "The Woman in White," published by Sampson, Low, Son & Co.? It is in three volumes.

The first edition of "The Woman in White," published in 1860, is worth about $5. Seven editions appeared within six months.

ANSWERS FROM READERS

HELEN WATTERSON MOODY. — Some ten or more years ago, in a "Point of View" in Scribner's Magazine, I wrote: "'Most of the work of the world is done by the men and the women who are not very well,' said a wise physician to me once." The "wise physician" was Dr. Henry Kirke Cushing, (the father of the noted Harvey Cushing of today,) himself a notable example of the truth of what he said. I wonder if this can be the verified quotation for which "L. M. S." asks in Appeals to Readers of June 8.

"Tears"

GRACE M. BROMLEY.—Some time ago there was an inquiry in THE BOOK REVIEW for a little poem called "Tears," by Lisette W. Reese. The poem is as follows:

When I consider life and its few years—
A wisp of fog between us and the sun;
A call to battle, and the battle done
Ere the last echo dies within our ears;
A rose choked in the grass, an hour of fears;
The gusts that past a darkening shore do bent;
The burst of music down an unlistening street—
I wonder at the idleness of tears.
Ye old, old dead, and ye of yesternight,
Chieftains and bards and keepers of the sheep,
By every cup of sorrow that you had,
Loose me from tears and make me see aright
How each hath back what once he stayed to weep,
Homer his sight, David his little lad!

Spectre of the Rose

E. W. LOTT.—The "Spectre of the Rose" which A. V. G. asked about on March 16 is by Th. Gautier, and the translation may be found in "Love Songs of France," published by the New Amsterdam Book Company, New York, and also in Werner's Readings No. 8:

Oh, raise your deep-fringed lids that close
To wrap you in some sweet dream's thrall;
I am the spectre of the rose
You wore but last night at the ball.

This is the first half of the first stanza.

Jorrocks's Jaunts

LAWRENCE GRANT.—In answer to "N. L. A." I am fairly sure that the quotation h used is from "Handley Cross," by R. S. Surtees. If not from "Handley Cross," then "Jorrocks's Jaunts and Jollities." These books, with "Mr. Sponge's Sporting Tours," are regarded as English classics among people who have anything to do with hunting and horses in England.

I have not read them for years, but I feel sure Mr. Jorrocks, a retired grocer, who "fancies" himself as a country squire and bought a pack of hounds of which he became master, was the man who originally made the speech.

The only misquotation is, I think, "'Ighway" instead of "'Ighroad."

Answers to this appeal were also received from Joseph G. Hester, Mount Vernon, N. Y.; George Pyott, Hartford, Conn.; Edwin J. Fisher, Flushing, N. Y., and J. McMahon, Johnstown, N. Y.

APPEALS TO READERS

E. A. B.—Can any of your readers inform me who is the author of the following lines and whence they are quoted:

Trumpeter, sound for the splendor of God,
Sound for the heights that our fathers trod
When truth was truth and love was love,
With a hell beneath but a heaven above,
Trumpeter, rally us, rally us, rally us,
On to the City of God.

Runaway Boy

F. H. BICKFORD.—Can some reader tell me where I can find or quote in full a poem which I had read to me as a child, which described the adventures of a little boy who ran away? At nightfall he returns, and the only lines I can remember, and they probably are not correctly quoted, are:

So he walked and he walked
Till he came once more
To the sunshiny porch and the old green door.

Chained in the Market Place

F. C. MEYH.—Kindly ask your readers to assist me in finding the name of author and the complete poem of which the following is a part:

Chained in the market place he stood,
A man of giant frame,
Amidst the gathering multitude
That shrunk to hear his name.

Home, Sweet Home

I. H. BAXTER.—Can any one give me the full poem which contains the following lines:

Louder and faster the song swelled on,
Till the dome of the heavens rung:
As "Home, Sweet Home" grew into the lines
Of every song that was sung.

Coming of Lafayette

MISS E. HOLTZOFF.—Can any of your readers supply the author's name and the rest of the following poem:

THE COMING OF LAFAYETTE.

Young Liberty went in her mountain nest,
For feeble of wing was she;
When gallantly into the stormy west
Her Knight sailed o'er the sea.
The flower of chivalry, deathless yet,
Had felt love's opening spell;
Where bloomed America's Lafayette,
On the banks of the Blue Mazelle.

Resplendent Angel

EVA OLCOTT.—There was printed recently in a magazine a poem in which were the following lines:

Resplendent angel so divinely blessed
In virtue redolent, of all goodness possessed.

Can any of your readers give me the poem or inform me where it can be found?

The Key of Yesterday

J. VROOM.—I would like to know who is the author of the following lines:

The key of Yesterday I threw away;
And now, too late,
Before Tomorrow's close-locked gate
Helpless I stand. In vain to pray,
In vain to sorrow,
Only the key of Yesterday
Unlocks Tomorrow.

I am not quite sure that I have quoted correctly.

Minnie Minton

MARY ARCHER KNAPP.—Would like to inquire if any reader can inform me as to where the words and music of an old war ballad of civil war times entitled "Minnie Minton" can be procured; it began:

Minnie Minton, I am dying
In the shadows all alone
On the battle's gory meadow,
Where the scythe of Death has mown.

The Three Hills

ELIZABETH DORTCH.—Will you kindly ask some of your readers if they will give me all of the poem called "The Three Hills," which was published in The Red Cross Magazine about two years ago? It consisted of three verses of four lines each, as I remember. The first verse is:

There was a hill in England,
Where happy children play.

Thoughts Are Things

L. J. L.—Can any one of your readers tell me where to find the brief quotation, "Thoughts are things"?

Gray Feet of Wind

SIDNEY EASTWOOD LANE. — Perhaps some reader can help me in ascertaining the name of the author of a poem containing the following lines:

The gray feet of the wind
Sweep o'er the bending grasses,
Down the bright meadows in the breezy noon.
Leaving behind them where each light foot passes
The track of their silver shoon.

The Home-Makers

CLARA M. HAGERMAN.—Can any of your readers tell me the name of the author of the comparatively short poem entitled, "The Home-makers"?

Buena Vista

CLARENCE WILLIS.—Can any of your readers give me the song of which the following is the first verse:

On Buena Vista's bloody field
A soldier dying lay,
His thoughts were on his mountain home
Some thousand miles away.

My Chrysalis State

L. P.—Can any reader place this quotation?

There in my chrysalis state I lie
Shaping my wings for heavenly birth.

Poets

E. B. WRIGHT.—Some years ago on the cover page of a typewritten list of poetical works for sale the following lines appeared:

You do not see in the world
The work of the poet's pen;
But poets are masters of words;
And words are masters of men.

I am anxious to know who wrote this.

while, he studies painting at Julien's. Presently his funds give out, and he has a very bad time of it indeed. After various vicissitudes, he goes on the stage, and returns to London with a theatrical troupe. Always he has done more or less writing, and he is still mingling acting and writing when he meets Eve Dalry, the girl whose help and whose complete self-sacrifice enable him to win the success he has coveted from the first. Of frail physique and strong will, ambitious, intensely egotistical, with high artistic ideals and absolute confidence in his own powers of achievement, he is from the very first an oddity in his surroundings, whether these are the suburbs or the stage. His passions are all exclusively of the intellect; he starves for a week to buy a volume of Pater, but he has no comrades other than books. Mentally mature, he is emotionally undeveloped. The circumstances of his life deprive him of the customary home affections, and he makes no friends, either among men or women, until he encounters Eve. She believes in him, and loves him, sacrifices her own ambitions to his, and makes herself a drudge in his service, confiding in his repeated promise that when success comes she shall share it. But only once in his life has Wynne ever thought of any one's happiness but his own, and then only for a single evening, so that but for the forcible intervention of a deus ex machina the romance would have ended in tragedy—and, indeed, one closes the book wondering whether the tragedy has not been merely postponed.

The scenes of Wynne's childhood, his father, his mother, and his home, are so cleverly drawn as to help one to gloss over the fact that the child Wynne is not at all convincing in his mental processes, which are too mature even for a singularly precocious child. But as boy and young man he becomes entirely real; his Paris and London adventures are well told, and the scene of the birthday supper in the garret rooms is delightful. Eve, though a conventional man's heroine, is portrayed with deft touches which make of her a sympathetic, flesh and blood woman, while several of the minor characters, notably Wynne's father and his Uncle Clem, are very clearly and neatly sketched.

THE RED SIGNAL

THE RED SIGNAL. By Grace Livingston Hill Lutz. With frontispiece. J. B. Lippincott Company. $1.35 net.

AN extremely improbable but not uninteresting story of how one young American girl foiled an entire outfit of German spies is told in Grace Livingston Hill Lutz's new book, "The Red Signal." The German spies were so excessively stupid that it would have been quite easy for Hilda Lessing to outwit them had it not been for the physical difficulties in her way. These, however, were many. She was to all intents and purposes a prisoner on the farm where the Schwarz family lived; they kept close watch on her, and when she tried to write, intercepted her letters. Moreover, she had no money; her Uncle Otto, who, like her own father, was of German birth, and who had himself sent her to the Schwarz farm, having defrauded her widowed mother, her little brother, and herself.

But Hilda was plucky. Uncle Otto had omitted to inform the Schwarzes that she perfectly understood German, and the spies very kindly held long conversations directly under her window, explaining matters to one another in a way which reminds the reader of a certain scene in Sheridan's farce, "The Critic." Despite her pluck and their obligingness, however, Hilda might have failed in her effort to convey to Washington the valuable information she had garnered had it not been for a young railway engineer. He had saved her life before ever she saw the Schwarzes or their farm, and it was for him and at his request that she set "the red signal." Of course, there is a love story in the book, and Hilda is a much honored and very happy young woman before the tale closes.

IN JERUSALEM

THE LITTLE DAUGHTER OF JERUSALEM. By Myriam Harry. E. P. Dutton & Co. $1.90 net.

PARTLY fiction, but mostly autobiography, this story of a childhood spent in the city which Mohammedans as well as Christmas regard as holy is one of unusual interest. It has an "introduction" by Jules Lemaitre of the Académie Française, in which he tells us something of the curious history of its author. Myriam Harry, like her heroine, Siona Benedictus, is the daughter of a Russian Jew, a convert to the English Church, and of a German woman, a Lutheran deaconess. Of her experiences after leaving her birthplace, Jeru-

A Pair of Remarkable and True Romances, typically American

ONE—the Story of Abraham Lincoln's Early Romance told now for the first time. One of the rarest and most exquisite love stories in History. Read Sir GILBERT PARKER'S letter quoted below.

THE OTHER—the strange, thrilling and heroic story, bubbling over with humor and lively incident, of those humble followers of Christ, the genuine American girls who brought "Home" to the Boys in France.

THE SOUL OF ANN RUTLEDGE

The Story of Abraham Lincoln's Romance

By BERNIE BABCOCK — Frontispiece. $1.50 NET

SIR GILBERT PARKER writes:—"I predict for this book a big popularity in the United States. It is a good picture of life in the backwoods in America in the days when Lincoln lived. The character of Ann is drawn with great charm and delicacy and Lincoln is seen at his best. I hope and believe that the book will have a prodigious sale. It overcomes one. I scarcely know why. I wonder if it is the infinite interest one feels in the character of Lincoln of whom I have always been an intense admirer. It stifles all criticism."

PHILA. NORTH AMERICAN:—"Many of the scenes in the tale are of a racy humor indigenous to America and the period of the story. There is a sincerity thruout that is in keeping with the subject, and the humor is of the type Lincoln himself loved. The devotion of Lincoln to this rarely gifted woman is a fine inspiriting idyl of pioneer days."

NEW YORK TIMES:—"The dominating figure of Lincoln is impressive. We are made to feel that here is indeed a man destined for great and splendid things. His experiences as rail-splitter, storekeeper, and postmaster are recounted. Intermingled with this is the idyl of his love for sweet, golden-haired Ann Rutledge."

THE WAR ROMANCE OF THE SALVATION ARMY

30 Illustrations. $1.50 NET

By COMMANDER EVANGELINE BOOTH AND GRACE LIVINGSTON HILL (LUTZ)

It would take many pages to adequately describe this truly remarkable work. It is not a war book, as such, for Commander Booth found the war a secondary matter. It is the tale of a very human humanity under the stress of war,—the doughboys, all kinds, with their fun and their heroism; the officers, from the corporals and sergeants to the majors and generals; the sweet-faced Salvation Army girls who braved death to serve them, are all here, together with hundreds of stories, humorous and thrilling, with character sketches of all nationalities.

NEW YORK TIMES:—"The book has a fascination peculiarly its own; it is full of anecdotes bubbling with humor, thrilling with heroic action and movingly pathetic."

This is an heroic epic and like all great books is written in a simple, flowing, earnest style without any attempt to embellish or adorn. The authors, in their modest way, unconscious of the kind of book they were preparing, have written one of the great and lasting books of war times. No American should miss reading this account of his own Christian home folks battling for humanity.

"The Commander-in-chief of the British during 1914-15 has written in a spirit of absolute candor a book that is destined to be read and quoted a hundred years hence. It is by far the most sensational of all the war books printed to date. It contains many facts of which the world previously had no inkling, and it is replete with disclosures. secretary of the Colonial Women's League, a semi-charitable organization ruled over by one Lady Mercia. Barely 20, chafing at the dull routine of her monotonous days, spent mostly in a dark basement office where the electric lights had to be kept burning all the time, without home, family or prospects, and possessed of an adventurous disposition, she took the fortnight's happiness which was offered her, feeling that to refuse it was to refuse her one chance, believing that at the worst she would be injuring no one but herself. So she spent her two weeks' holiday in the country with the man who strongly attracted her, and who was soon to leave England.

But though she had believed that her action would involve no one but herself, she very quickly discovered that what she had done did affect other people, and presently that she had badly handicapped herself by what she came to look upon as a piece of crude and underbred folly. It was, too, folly for which she was obliged to pay a stiff price when she met the man who would have made her a suitable husband for more than merely a holiday. She is a well-drawn and attractive heroine, who wins and keeps the reader's sympathy, and her daily grind at the office is vividly pictured. Mrs. Coppleston is a delightful old lady, and George Swayne's behavior is thoroughly consistent. The account of Vervain's experiences with the well-meaning ladies who managed and financed the Colonial Women's League is cleverly done, and though the greater part of the scene is laid in London, there are some gracefully drawn sketches of the Devonshire moors, and of the County of Bucks, where the story reaches its climax.

ORANGES AND LEMONS

ORANGES AND LEMONS. By Mary C. E. Wemyss. Houghton Mifflin Company. $1.50 net.

A CONVENTIONAL and mildly—very mildly—amusing little story is related by Mrs. Wemyss, under the tropical-sounding title of "Oranges and Lemons." Elsie Carston's brother had married the sister of Marcus Maitland, much to the annoyance of that gentleman, who was extremely fond of his sister and did not want her to marry anybody. So very disgruntled was he that he went off on various travels and remained away from England for a number of years. Meanwhile his sister's husband was Governor of different places in excessively hot climates; his wife remained with him, but it was necessary for their children to be left in England in the care of their maiden aunt Elsie, who was very fond of them. At the time the story begins Marcus Maitland has returned to England and is living luxuriously in his own house in London. And it is because he is living in London that his sister asks him to take charge of her elder daughter, Diana, now 19, very charming, and possessed of any number of masculine admirers.

Marcus soon finds himself quite adoring Diana. He and Elsie were jealous of each other, and fancied they disliked each other intensely. Both loved Diana, Dick, their nephew, and the six-year-old girl who was called "Shan't," this being short for "Shan't-if-I-don't-want-to." The experiences of aunt and uncle with the two girls and with Diana's numerous suitors make up the story, the scene of which moves from London to Bestways, where Elsie Carston lived, then to an English seaside resort, and thence to Scotland, where all the little complications are straightened out.

CORNELIA

CORNELIA: The Story of a Benevolent Despot. By Lucy Fitch Perkins. With illustrations by the author. New York and Boston: Houghton Mifflin Company. $1.25.

HERE is another delightful child! Not that the relatives and neighbors of a Cornelia in the flesh would have been likely to choose just that adjective; clever they would undoubtedly have called her; resourceful, original, generous, fearless; but delight would be scarcely the word for the human reaction to Cornelia. At a distance, through the pages of a book, it is. Cornelia is a joy!

Cornelia Van Dine is 11, the daughter of the wise and gentle "Dominie," who is not only spiritual adviser but virtual head of the large Dutch colony in an American city. Every one in the neighborhood knows Cornelia, and she is interested in every one. And there is nothing that Cornelia takes into her head that she will not do. She is quickly moved by the misfortunes of others, as quick to take steps to help them; and at 11 she is a "benevolent despot," indeed. Says Cornelia's father:

> The trouble with Cornelia isn't that she takes too little responsibility. Quite the reverse. She takes too much. Only it's about the wrong things.

Our first acquaintance with Cornelia shows us her solution of the Winter fuel problem for a woman whose husband has deserted her. There are three children in the Ahern family, and the baby has the measles. Obviously something must be done. Cornelia does it. She leads the young son of the house, a boy of her own age, to the church cellars, and helps him fill his coal basket from the church bins. The results of this prompt action are complicated. Be it mentioned that resourceful Cornelia, like resourceful Tommy before her, always "finds a way"!

Perhaps her greatest feat is the overthrow of a local politician, which she accomplishes with great decision and éclat. But the final episode in this history is both unexpected and endearing. Though the book is a collection of different exploits and adventures, one of Cornelia's achievements often leads to—or necessitates—another, and the chapters are quite definitely connected by more than the personality of the heroine. The book is original, amusing, human. And Cornelia is decidedly worth knowing.

THE YEAR 2025

A ROMANCE OF TWO CENTURIES. A Tale of the Year 2025. By Kenneth Sylvan Guthrie. Alpine, N. J.: The Platonist Press. $1.05.

Few are the people possessing even a little glimmer of imagination who do not sometimes give themselves over to wondering what the world will be like a hundred, or five hundred, or a thousand years hence and who do not sometimes wish they might revisit, some centuries later, the scenes of their present existence and compare those future developments with life as they knew it. It is a fascinating excursion of fancy, always, whether one does it one's self or whether one reads the results of some other person's imaginative flights. And those who enjoy it most will doubtless read Mr. Guthrie's romance with interest and with, perhaps, occasional freakish sensations in the spinal region. It is told in the first person by a man who had been a Chaplain with the American Expeditionary Force in France during the world war and when he and others, falling into the hands of the enemy, had been inoculated with various diseases it chanced that sleeping sickness germs had been his fate. The author gives the freest kind of a rein to his fancy in telling how he sleeps for more than a century and how he is finally awakened. The greater part of the romance is then taken up with his account of the world into which he awakes, how he travels over the greater part of it and how he is impressed by the new methods of living, the new standards of conduct, the new interests of men and women, the new organization of society. And at the very end the author allows his sense of humor to run away with his fancy and gives a touch of farcicality to his whole story by its closing incident.

WOODEN SPOIL

WOODEN SPOIL. By Victor Rousseau. George H. Doran Company. $1.50 net.

Those persons whose delight it is to read long and detailed accounts of rough-and-tumble fighting will thoroughly enjoy Mr. Rousseau's story of "Wooden Spoil." Its hero, Hilary Askew, is both ready and skillful with his fists, and never in the least afraid of being overpowered by numbers. "Dashing his fists upward, he caught Pierre under the chin, forcing his head back; at the same time he grasped the wrist which held the knife, and swung so as to interpose the outlaw's body between himself and Leblanc's blow," this typical passage being but a single and a mild example of Hilary's prowess.

Apart from its fighting, the book is a very long and conventional story of a young man who inherits a large tract of Canadian woodland from an uncle, who had sunk a fortune in it and in the lumber company which he had started. The book begins when Hilary Askew arrives to take possession of his property. He very soon discovers that his uncle has been and that he himself is being ruthlessly cheated by several scoundrels, and, of course, he has a great deal of trouble with a rival company, the Ste. Marie, in whose interests his own, the St. Boniface, is being "bled white." To increase his difficulties there is the girl, Mademoiselle Madeleine Rosny, daughter of the old Seigneur Rosny, who once owned the entire district, a heroine as beautiful, brave, and intensely stupid as one might wish to meet. The most amusing part of the very long book is the description of how the curé, Father Lucien, finding persuasion of little or no avail with his obstinate flock, resorted to the study and the use of the single stick, with most gratifying results.

THE NEW ERA

ONE is always living in a new era, whether it is a new era of poetry, or art, or science or what not. But when we are given to understand that this is the new era in American poetry, and that—inferentially—all past eras become somewhat diminutive by comparison, the assumption is difficult to follow. Mr. UNTERMEYER'S expository work on the subject, reviewed elsewhere in these columns, gives an interesting survey of contemporary poetry and the men and women who are creating it. Moreover, in reading what Mr. UNTERMEYER has to say on these matters one is confirmed in the opinion that there is much of a very fine and vital character in the poetry that is being produced today. But it is difficult to believe that now, for the first time, democracy is finding its adequate apotheosis in song. One needs only to go back to WHITMAN to recognize an American poet of democracy whose eloquence and prophetic vision in the treatment of this theme has not been excelled, at least so far as we know, by singers belonging to the so-called new era in American poetry. Neither does democracy as a theme for poetry receive its first recognition at the hands of WHITMAN. Man's equality and brotherhood have inspired to passionate utterance the great poets and prophets from time immemorial. Singers like SHELLEY have chosen this as the central theme for their muse. That it is in especial favor with the poets of today is an excellent sign, a certain indication that poetry has not lost its vital grasp on human affairs and that it is still to be counted among the great uplifting factors that is leading the race onward to ever higher development. But there is such a thing as spoiling the essence and spirit of poetry by being too dogmatic about it. WHITMAN is a bard, not a mere doctrinaire; and when enthusiasts belonging to various cults would annex him to themselves they deliberately ignore this essential bardic element in him. The highest type of poetry does not concern itself with formulating and pushing a school of political economy any more than it does a system of morals. The one is as foreign to its purpose as the other. But it gives the impulse, the inspiration for all these things. If this is the new era in poetry, it is not in the sense that our poets have a new set of doctrines to teach, as it is that they have a new spirit, a new voice through which to utter the eternal verities of art and nature.

OPINION, doubtless, will always differ regarding the character of the heroine in "Cynthia," the third novel to appear in the collected edition of LEONARD MERRICK'S works that the DUTTONS are publishing. Is the spiritual change wrought in her through her marriage convincing? Of the veracity of the first steps in her development there can be no doubt—the question arises in regard to the Cynthia that gradually emerges from the last half of the book. Aside from that psychological problem, however, Cynthia undoubtedly excites and holds the masculine reader's admiration, a fact that impresses Mr. MAURICE HEWLETT, who writes thus of her and her problem in his introduction to the book:

> I myself am one of Cynthia's victims, and I am sure that Mr. MERRICK is another. He sketches her with admirable reticence in the beginning, where she is shown to us as very little more than a pretty girl. His strokes are few and sure. But she grows from chapter to chapter, and at the end, after the tragic crisis which crowns the tale of her married life with a dignity and grave beauty which justify a belief in Hestia, even now, when modern testimony and practice alike are against such a belief she justifies Mr. MERRICK'S conclusion, too. It is seldom enough that we are able to believe in the happy solution of such troubles as he has traced out in "Cynthia." Cynics against inclination, we feel that the dog will return to his vomit after the easy reconciliation and facile tears upon Hestia's generous bosom. Not so here. Cynthia has got her Humphrey for what he is worth, and will hold him. She is one of Mr. MERRICK'S loveliest women; and he has made many lovely women.

One would like to know how much of Mr. MERRICK'S actual personal experiences in gaining recognition for his literary work has been drawn upon in the astonishing case of the hero of this novel. If the writers of really good fiction had to endure the miseries of Kent, Cynthia's husband, authorship as a profession would scarcely appeal to any sane man, however gifted in a literary way for serious consideration. There may be isolated cases in real life like Kent's, but it is safe to say that they are isolated and do not furnish in any way a measure of what the literary aspirant has to face before he comes into his own. The real defect of the book lies not so much in the sensationalism of Kent's experiences as in the doubt arising in the reader's mind as to whether this somewhat unpleasant hero of fiction was actually as great a novelist as Mr. MERRICK declares him to be. But this is a defect that is inherent apparently in practically all novels that take a novelist for their hero.

SO crowded have been the events attending the formation and adoption of the Peace Treaty that matters of paramount historical importance are apt to become obscured, at least for the general reader, in the daily news reports of what takes place in the Peace Conference at Versailles. Of special interest in this connection is the evolution of the treaty itself before it reached the final form in which it was adopted. This history of the treaty is the leading feature of THE NEW YORK TIMES CURRENT HISTORY MAGAZINE for July, in which is given the complete text of the German notes and counterproposals, with the reply of the Allies and explanation of treaty changes, the whole comprising a narrative of 25,000 words. Another important feature of the magazine is HINDENBURG'S defense of the Kaiser's abdication and LUDENDORFF'S confession of defeat in August, 1918. Then there are Field Marshal HAIG'S concluding review of the battles in Flanders; official phases of the final conquest of East Africa; an account of the great army of the Allies formed in the Near East; a tribute to EDITH CAVELL by PHILIP GIBBS, and a detailed account of the nurse's tragic fate of her companion, LOUISE THULIEZ, with the story of the latter's escape. There is an official account of the conquest of the Atlantic by aircraft, the whole given in one continuous narrative, besides articles on "The Philippine Independence Movement," "Korean Unrest," "The Kaiser's Plotters in Spain," "Finland During the War," "How the 2,000,000 Americans Were Sent to Europe," "Achievements of the Fighting American Engineers," &c.

LATEST WORKS OF FICTION

salem, experiences of which Monsieur Lemaitre writes so entertainingly, the book tells nothing, closing as it does with Siona's departure from Palestine at the age of 14. She is a fascinating child, precocious, exceptionally intelligent, passionate, beauty-loving, intensely sensitive to the impressions of her strange and colorful environment, an environment rendered yet more strange by her personal and immediate surroundings. For her father is a dreamer and an antiquarian, proprietor of a book and curio shop, the back of which overlooks the Pool of Bathsheba, with a passion for potteries and idols and all sorts of ancient fragments and inscriptions from the Land of Moab. Siona learned the Phoenician alphabet before her own modern one, and played with small, hideous images of Baal and Moloch and Ashtaroth as though they had been so many dolls—until her mother discovered her holding one of them, and almost expired with horror. This German mother was a strict Lutheran, well-meaning, affectionate, and sentimental, but narrow-minded and entirely devoid of any sympathy with her husband's studies and his interest in what to her were merely heathen idols—except when there was a prospect of making money out of them.

Placed between these two, Siona acquired much curious lore on the one hand, and on the other a general impression that for a real Christmas Day one must have snow. Her mother always procured a stunted cypress for a Christmas tree, since "in the length and breadth of Palestine not a single fir tree was to be found," and arranged decorations and festivities from which "everything that savored of an Eastern origin was strictly taboo." But Siona did not always remain at home, and the book tells of her adventures at school and in the Jewish quarter, of the romantic coming of the desert chief, Amr-ben-Diab, King of Moab, of her journey to Jaffa, and of her encounters with the pilgrims at the Jordan—and with one Russian pilgrim in particular. The book is full of that forced intermixture and constant clashing of race with race and creed with creed of which Jerusalem is so peculiarly the scene, yet despite the variety and richness of the background, that background is never permitted to dominate the figure of the dreamy child Siona, to whom the temple was a delightful place in which to play. An ex-nun of the Greek Church taught her mispronounced and faulty French, a Mohammedan negro who had been a slave rescued her from a threatened massacre, a Protestant deaconess, her mother's friend and her own godmother, soothed her woes, and her nurse, Ouarda, a handsome Bethlehemite, who vibrated between the Greek Church and that of Rome, took her to see the beheading of a Bedouin chief when she was still young and small enough to be carried shoulder-high above the motley throng.

The development of the little girl brought up in this distinctly variegated fashion, is admirably handled. She is a real and a lovable creature, this "Little Daughter of Jerusalem," and we part from her with regret and a wish to know what happened to her in that western world to which she was journeying. The descriptions are both delicate and vivid, and the whole book is impregnated with the half wistful, half humorous tenderness of one who from maturity looks back upon the joys and sorrows of childhood.

A GALLANT LADY

A GALLANT LADY. By Percy Brebner. Duffield & Co. $1.60 net.

A VERY gallant lady indeed was Adrienne Delacroix, ward of Louis XIV., King of France. Her twin brother, Claude, was the rightful Duke of Sauverne, but he lacked his sister's spirit, and was in fact little better than a good-for-nothing, so while there was a very small party in Sauverne which wanted to make him Duke, a far larger one was conspiring to make Adrienne herself the Duchess and their ruler, as the Salic law did not apply in Sauverne. The usurping Duke Paul, while aware of the former plot, knew nothing about the latter. Nevertheless, as he was a bachelor, he thought it would be wise for him to strengthen his position by a marriage with Adrienne, then at Versailles, and sent a message to King Louis asking for her hand, thereby placing that astute monarch in something of a dilemma. From this dilemma Louis decided to extricate himself by a trick, and for this endeavored to make use of a certain penniless gentleman, a soldier of fortune who called himself Henri Marcel, but who was in truth Raymond de Savillac, a poor and unfortunate member of a great family. What de Savillac's honesty, shrewdness, chivalrous loyalty, and excellent sword-play, and Adrienne's quick wit and high courage did to the schemes of both the Duke and the King the story relates.

It is an interesting and an entertaining romance in the Dumas-Stanley Weyman tradition, well written and spirited, with plenty of twists and surprises and hair-breadth escapes, several villains, and a hero quite as gallant as the heroine. There is true love in abundance, a good fight on a stairway, swords flash, gags and masks and disguises are used, and horses ridden at breakneck speed—all that is meet and fitting in a tale of this type. Upon one occasion Savillac narrowly escapes from being hanged, while had Duke Paul been just a little different the fates both of Savillac and of the lovely Adrienne might have been settled with unpleasant speed. The story is well told, a lively, swift-moving romance which holds the reader's attention until the last page is reached.

WINESBURG, OHIO

WINESBURG, OHIO. By Sherwood Anderson. New York: B. W. Huebsch. $1.50.

CONCEIVABLY these stories might have been written before the advent of the new psychology, but if so they would not have been understood. The characters are actuated by motives not exterior; their actions give something of the startling effect of a head and shoulders snapping suddenly out of a hidden trap-door in an empty room. But Mr. Anderson's expositions make these sudden, infinitesimal, half-mad actions as natural to the reader as an excrescence to a physician; both are the result of accumulated secretions. Freud and Jung have taught us how hopes and ideas crammed back into subcellars of consciousness emerge in grotesque masquerade when pressure slackens or becomes too taut; the little tragedies and comedies which take place in Mr. Anderson's town of Winesburg, Ohio, have the support of scientific revelation.

Not that Mr. Anderson's preoccupation has been with science, not even, as in several of the stories, when he deals with characters who live in the borderlands of sanity. His is a purely human curiosity. The passionate school teacher, Kate Swift, in her yearning to have a share in molding the life of a boy she feels to possess genius, says to him:

> I would like to make you understand the import of what you think of attempting. You must not become a mere peddler of words. The thing to learn is to know what people are thinking about, not what they say.

This is Mr. Anderson's creed also, and his realization of it in this book gives it an extraordinary quality of vividness, sincerity, tenderness. The inclusion of the last quality may seem surprising in view of what is perhaps the unfortunate introduction to this review; that may have suggested that Mr. Anderson uses the scalpel. Well, he does, but not in the interests of sensation. He loves what he touches; there is the poetry and pathos of the opening story in the book, "Hands," as tragic as the stories dealing with Elizabeth Willard, "Death" and "Mother." The latter tells of a mother who lives in the hope of a destiny for her son removed from drabness. Yet she cannot make the boy see it; it is the tragedy of the inarticulate. The woman's futile struggle to speak reminds one somehow of John Barrymore's dumb gestures when he played Falder in "Justice." Then there are the closing words in "The Philosopher," a characteristic passage, again addressed to young George Willard:

> If something happens, perhaps you will be able to write the book that I may never get written. The idea is very simple, so simple that if you are not careful you will forget it. It is this—that every one in the world is Christ and they are all crucified. That's what I want to say. Don't you forget that. Whatever happens, don't you dare let yourself forget.

If this book came out of Russia we should do it lip-service. But even its American origin ought not to dim Mr. Anderson's achievement. It is an easy way of rubber-stamping works of art to compare them to others that have won consideration. Only this prevents us ranking "Winesburg, Ohio," with "Spoon River," or such sketches as Tolstoy's "A Blot of Ink." Besides, Mr. Anderson's voice is his own. He has not been afraid to speak. He has plucked at the heart of the mystery.

THE HOLIDAY HUSBAND

THE HOLIDAY HUSBAND. By Dolf Wyllarde. George H. Doran Company. $1.50 net.

THAT much-discussed question, the double standard of sex-morality, forms the basis of Dolf Wyllarde's new and interesting story, "The Holiday Husband." It is the tale of one Vervain Chalmont, who ventured to take for herself such liberty—or license—as would be allowed a young man. She was the underpaid, underfed, and overworked executive

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS

New York London

¶ Beginning with the flight from Berlin of the first William in 1848, to the escape of his grandson to Amerongen in 1918, Mr. Bigelow, always a delightful litterateur and an authoritative historian, gives an animated, unprejudiced review of seventy years of Hohenzollern glory and shame.

¶ His narrative reveals truths unwelcome to Prussian officialism.

¶ Out of long years of interesting associations in Prussian diplomatic circles, "with rare opportunities of looking the Hun between the eyes in every military district along the Baltic," Mr. Bigelow sounds a note of warning against pacifism's failures through the years in combatting the Vandals beyond the Rhine.

THE NEW ERA IN AMERICAN POETRY

THE NEW ERA IN AMERICAN POETRY. By Louis Untermeyer. Henry Holt & Co. $2.25.

A FEW days ago two or three of the younger group of writers were discussing how far the conservative press is in the habit of boycotting the literary man of radical political views. In reply to the assertion that he didn't stand much of a show, it was suggested that, after all, his books seemed to be reviewed pretty favorably, and mention of them was far from being suppressed, or even influenced, by the general policy of the paper.

"That is true," a young man of the extreme Left admitted gloomily, "but"—brightening—"it must be r-remembered that nowadays most of the book reviewers are themselves r-radicals!"

In other words, the group on the Left have the evil habit of which they accuse the group on the Right; they cannot conceive of a judgment upon a book purely as a book, as a work of art; it must necessarily reflect the critic's ideas upon subjects no more related to literature than his views upon the digestibility of spinach. Mr. Untermeyer's new book of current criticism tends to confirm this opinion. He is, of course, unconscious that his views—say upon the digestibility of spinach—have at all influenced his views upon books, but the fact remains that when a poet's work chimes with the music of social and political reform that continually runs on like a hidden brook in the leafy month of June, at the back of the critic's mind, that poet is "American," "indigenous," "democratic"; when it fails to do so, he is "sterile," "devitalized," "artificial."

Yet this is not altogether a defect. It gives to "The New Era in American Poetry" the human and intimate note that a world reluctant to adjure personal gossip is constantly seeking; it makes it interesting to an audience that would be indifferent to more abstract criticism.

Within the sixteen chapters of the book above fourscore American poets are mentioned, sometimes very briefly, sometimes to the extent of several pages, with illustrative quotation. Most, if not all, the chapters have previously appeared in literary periodicals, but in book form they have been cleverly freshened by being strung, like bright assorted beads, upon a string. This string is Mr. Untermeyer's theory that poetry is now, for the first time in American history, "expressing itself once more in the terms of democracy." Democracy is almost as inclusive a word as charity, and for the assembling together of a large and heterogeneous group of writers it is the longest and the strongest string possible.

Not that it is a new string. Giving all credit to Mr. Untermeyer for the intelligence and the novelty of his method, one feels that he has forgotten that he is, after all, handling materials fundamentally old. Alter Brody, or Arturo Giovannitti, or Carl Sandburg, or any other of the eighty-odd may be a better poet than Whittier or Lowell—we are not discussing that point—but it is absurd to say that he is more truly a poet of "democracy." When Mr. Untermeyer claims that democracy is today uttering its first cradle-cry through these gentlemen he merely means that much of the poetry of the last decade has been the natural and human vociferation of the old democracy in the process of changing its shirt and finding some of the buttons off.

But leaving aside the question of democracies, old and new, "The New Era in American Poetry" is a most useful milestone—or rather, since milestones are out of date, and the volume so very up to date, a most useful speedometer. We have only to look backward from it a little way in time to see how swiftly American poetry has traveled. It was in Poetry and Drama for December, 1913, that John Alford complained of the thinness and undistinctive character of current American verse, and in the number for March, 1914, that Mr. Untermeyer accused Mr. Alford of appearing to be "even less acquainted with current American poetry than a literary critic on an American newspaper," and defended William Ellery Leonard from his attack, going on to bid Mr. Alford consider the work of James Oppenheim, John Hall Wheelock, Joyce Kilmer, Edwin Arlington Robinson, Vachel Lindsay, John G. Neihardt, Edwin Markham, and Bliss Carman, together with "Arthur Davison Ficke, George Sterling, Sara Teasdale, Zoë Akins, Edna Millay, and half a dozen others—all trying to reenter their own times in terms of their own times."

Mr. Alford should, no doubt, have known something of the work of Mr. Robinson, Mr. Lindsay, Mr. Wheelock, and Miss Teasdale, but even these swallows would not have made a Summer for American poetry. Mr. Oppenheim had not at that time published any work in which he could be said to have found himself. Of the others it may be debatable whether Mr. Untermeyer's critical faculty has matured in the last four years, or whether they simply fail to slide easily upon the "democracy" string which runs through "The New Era," but the fact is that the author now mentions them only to refer briefly to "the disturbed academic fluency" of Mr. Leonard, "the overstressed virility" of Mr. Neihardt, "the febrile grotesques" of Mr. Ficke, "the cramped nobilities" of Mr. Sterling, and the "echoes of the 'grand manner'" of Mr. Markham, while Mr. Kilmer and Mr. Carman are dismissed with a word that scarcely amounts even to the damning of faint praise.

Yet at the very moment when Mr. Alford was complaining that America had none but minor poets and Mr. Untermeyer was unwillingly confirming him in his opinion, three figures great with promise were already knocking at their oblivious door. They were Carl Sandburg, Robert Frost, and Amy Lowell. For the last four years these figures have dominated American poetry, and so far their sway shows no sign of waning. They are the true American renascents both Mr. Alford and Mr. Untermeyer were looking for—vigorous, finely tempered, pioneering, unsparing of themselves in their search for the kernel of beauty and reality at the heart of things. In "The New Era" Mr. Untermeyer recognizes their qualities with sincere and generous praise, but to a reader not already familiar with their work, they would hardly stand out in sufficient relief from the general ruck. Carl Sandburg is given less space than John Hall Wheelock, Amy Lowell less than James Oppenheim, and Robert Frost less than Vachel Lindsay.

Mr. Untermeyer's tendency is generally less to try the spirits than to acclaim them, especially if they happen to be "protagonists and prophets" rather than merely "decorators and describers." This fondness for the protagonist-prophet spirit explains, perhaps, why Maxwell Bodenheim receives heartier praise than John Gould Fletcher, and why Charles Erskine Wood, the aged poet of "an unfettered but instinctively controlled freedom, * * * a world existing beneficently in self-directed order, in a state of sublimated anarchy"—the words are Mr. Untermeyer's—is nearly twice as important, measured in terms of allotted space, as is "H. D. E." But when Mr. Untermeyer consents to be merely a literary critic, and not a dancer before the ark of the covenant of the New Era, his judgments are shrewd and discriminating. His comments upon the "flabby desuetude" of Edgar Lee Masters's recent work, the rôle of "Chautauqua platform performer" into which Vachel Lindsay not infrequently drops, and his characterization of certain poetry of the "others" school as "the art of evasion, or eroticism gone to seed, of a perfumed and purposeless revolt," are as just as they are severe, while every now and then even an admiring phrase takes a suspicious upward turn, like a bent pin in an inviting chair. Just what, for instance, does Mr. Untermeyer mean when he says of Willard Wattles, that "he gets into these simple, semi-mystical verses a quality that is not only racial but almost Kansan"?

"The New Era in American Poetry" is not, it may be complained, criticism of the highest order. One can only say in reply that it hardly professes to be criticism at all—it is rapid, intelligent, informative reviewing. Its author has not the long look of the critic, the look which ranges the past and sees the half-effaced trails which link it with the present. The world is new-made—one had almost said new-laid—for him. He is constantly reminding us of the "New Era," the "New Spirit," the "new tendencies," the "new influences," and so forth, every one of them fresh from the hand of the Creator. Mr. Untermeyer's God is a busy God. Yet even this leaning toward special creation rather than to the tedium of evolution gives to the book a certain liveliness. The past—personified in everything ante Walt Whitman—is dead, and we are invited to dance the carmagnole upon its grave. Vive the New!

THE HIDDEN VALLEY

By the Author of "The Best in Life," "Earth," "Autumn," etc.
Cloth. 400 pages. $1.75 net.

Twice Sheila Travers grasped at Happiness and it eluded her. The man to whom she gave the love of her early youth was hot-blooded, selfish, sensual, and by a scene of unbridled passion during their stay at the house of a mutual friend, disgusted the girl with the idea of marriage. The man with whom she entered into a legalized "co-partnership" union some years later was cold, ambitious, self-absorbed, and the girl suffered from soul-starvation. A picture which she cherished seemed to symbolize her life—an empty road, with a suggestion of something mystical, restful, satisfying, at the end. Later, Sheila met the painter of this picture, and with his help she found the Hidden Valley below the brow of the hill—the glorious fulfilment of all her dreams.

BOOKS IN BRIEF REVIEW

rocked the boat. It was the first depth bomb! Others followed in quick succession until a total of twenty-two were counted. Inside the submarine it was quiet as the grave—the only sounds that broke the stillness were the frequent reports from the petty officer at the microphones to the Captain telling him when the sounds of the destroyers' propellers showed they were approaching or receding and in which direction.

Five of the depth bombs exploded so close that the boat was shaken from stem to stern, and I fully expected to see the seams open and the water rush in. * * *

But the U-90 escaped, luckily for the gallant Lieutenant and for us who are now enabled to read his record. He describes the ticklish journey through the Cattegat mine field; of all the nerve-racking jobs steering a submarine through mine-sown waters must be the most trying. Then came Wilhelmshaven and the Lieutenant's transference to the Preussen, an old battleship. Here he was kept in solitary confinement and practically starved. Then he was taken to Karlsruhe and put in charge of the army authorities. In the camp at Karlsruhe were 100 British, 60 French, 15 Italian, and 5 Serbian officers.

Life in the camp was decidedly unpleasant. The food was scanty and wretched. When they analyzed a half pound of coarse black bread one day they found it to consist of "water and potatoes; second, sawdust and chaff, and third, sand. As for the soup, * * * it looked and tasted like water, and the leaves with which it was filled were of course not edible."

Incessantly Lieutenant Isaacs was making plans to escape. But for one reason or another all the plans he made at Karlsruhe failed. After a time he was transferred to the American camp at Villingen in the Black Forest. On the way there he jumped from the train, but was so badly hurt that the guards caught up with him. They were furious, and beat and kicked him into insensibility. When they reached camp he was put into solitary confinement. But his attempts to escape from this camp did finally succeed. With Willis, another prisoner, he managed to elude the guards and to reach the Rhine after a heart-breaking flight, during which Willis's hair, like the Prisoner of Chillon's, turned white. The two men swam the Rhine and reached Switzerland, where they were safe. This is only the skeleton of one of the best war books the reviewer has yet seen.

WHAT AMERICA DID

THE WEB: The Authorized History of the American Protective League. By Emerson Hough. Chicago: The Reilly & Lee Company. $2.

AMERICA did many big things, and did them at high speed and all at the same time, during her year and a half of war. The organization and achievement of the A. P. L., the American Protective League, was one of the finest and biggest and most useful of them all. Because it worked silently and secretly the great, heedless, general public knows very little about what it was or what it did. And there are many reasons why every man and woman in this whole country ought to know the full story of the A. P. L.'s work. For if they are good Americans already it will make them still better ones, will stimulate their pride and their loyalty. If they are not good Americans it will put the fear of God into their hearts. And, therefore, although Mr. Hough's account of the aid the A. P. L. gave to our country in a time of need and peril lacks much in the way of possible literary form and execution, is in fact very carelessly written, it is a book which ought to have the very widest reading. Not only does it make known a great many things which every American ought to know, but it also shows that so many and such great dangers still lurk in the same quarters that the reading of the book ought to arouse even the most heedless to watchfulness and effort.

The A. P. L. came into being quickly and spontaneously to serve a great need, the need of the Government intelligence forces for many times the number of men and the amount of money at their disposal in order to checkmate the secret workings of the German Government in this country. Its organization was begun a few weeks prior to our entrance into the war and at the end of hostilities its members numbered a quarter of a million of the most intelligent, resourceful, loyal and devoted citizens of America. They had worked day and night in the service of the country without pay and without public recognition or honor, and often to the detriment of their own affairs. Three million cases passed under its investigating hands during the twenty months of its existence. It was wholly unofficial, but it had the approval and operated under the direction of the United States Department of Justice, and carried that statement on its letterheads. When the organization was disbanded early in the present year Mr. Hough was appointed to write its authorized history, and this 500-page volume is the result. He had access to all the records of the league and therefore his work will stand as the authoritative history of an organization unique among civilized nations whose achievement, as Mr. Hough well says, could not have taken place in any other country of the world.

Mr. Hough first tells the story of the origin and early days of the league and then goes on with a detailed account of its general activities. The chapters on how German propaganda was spread and its insidious qualities, on the great spy cases and some of the individual German spies, on the handling of bad enemy aliens, and the pursuit of slackers, are full of accounts of special cases which the members of the A. P. L. investigated. Another chapter dealing with the methods by which the league secured some of its evidence is as thrilling as a number of detective stories condensed into one. A section devoted to the I. W. W. trial at Chicago last Summer ought to be studied by every American not already thoroughly familiar with the methods and purposes of that sinister crew. Mr. Hough summarizes the proved story of their evildoing, a story that no loyal American can afford to forget. The question which the author asks at the end of the chapter is one that every such American needs to consider: "If we have 100,000 I. W. W. members such as these yet among us, and internment camps full of Germans and pro-Germans, would there not seem need for a housecleaning?"

More than half the volume is devoted to separate accounts of the organization and activities of the A. P. L. in a dozen or more different cities and in the different sections. A final chapter makes an impassioned plea to all Americans to take up the work that now must be done to make sure the victory of the battlefields:

> We must remake America. We must purify the source of America's population and keep it pure. We must rebuild the whole theory of our citizenship in America. We must care for the safety of America's homes and the safety of the American ideal. We must insist that there shall be an American loyalty, brooking no amendment or qualification. * * * Already Americans stir uneasily under the revelations of treachery within our gates. They ask of themselves: Since these things were true but now, what guarantee have we for the future? How can America protect herself against the future treachery of so large an element of her population? The answer to that question is very easy for bold men. Let us clean house. If the existing broom is not sufficient for that, let us make another broom.

Other interesting matters which the volume contains are a chart of the organization of the A. P. L., the oath of membership and the constitution, both of these now first made public, and other historical data.

PEKING DUST

PEKING DUST. By Ellen N. La Motte. New York: The Century Company. $1.50.

"POOR OLD CHINA" is the title of the author's first chapter, and the almost contemptuous affection of that title gives some idea of the picture of the ancient kingdom, now a republic, presented in this book. Half humorously Miss La Motte describes China's helplessness in the face of European exploitation; unrighteous depredations masking under the pleasant euphemism, "spheres of influence." In the case of Japan, Miss La Motte tells you the term "spheres of influence" is dropped in favor of the more direct and accurate "aggression." It may be surprising to some to learn that England has a 27 per cent. interest in China, Russia a 42 per cent. interest, as compared to Japan's 4 per cent., increased by the Shantung concession, just granted by the Peace Conference, to 6. Miss La Motte does not hesitate to call a spade by its own name. Of the twelve demands made by Great Britain in regard to Tibet the author says that they "virtually amount to the annexation of Tibet by the British Government."

> We are so accustomed to hearing of the famous Twenty-one Demands of Japan that we fail to realize that other nations make demands equally sweeping and equally arbitrary. Of course, these British demands will not receive the worldwide attention accorded those of Japan. Remember, over here it is not customary to think of or speak of anything but "Japanese aggression." Japan, you see, offers the only stumbling-block to the complete domination of the Orient by Europe. But for Japan, China might possibly become another India.

Within these "spheres of influence" the various European countries owning the concessions are supreme. China, for example, cannot borrow money from America to develop a needed railroad in the French or in the English concession. The opium traffic, strictly forbidden on Chinese soil, may be carried on at will on the ground of the foreign concessions and the Chinese are powerless to prevent it. Foreigners resident in China are not subject to Chinese laws. "In his own concession the foreigner is amenable to the laws of his own country." Nor is China allowed to regulate her customs duties: "This poor old country, rich as she is or as she might become, has virtually no revenue, for she is allowed to have but a nominal tariff."

The crowning example of foreign exploitation, however, is furnished by the "Lao-Hsi-Kai Incident." After a time it became an "incident"; in the first outburst of impotent Chinese indignation—Chinese indignation is always impotent owing to her lack of arms—it was known as the "Lao-Hsi-Kai Outrage." The fact is that the French "grabbed" (the author's word) 333 acres in the heart of Tienstin:

> The attack, or charge, or party of occupation, whatever you choose to call it, was led in person by the French Chargé d'Affaires, at the head of a band of French soldiers. They seized and arrested all the Chinese soldiers on duty in the district, put them all in prison, and in the name of the Republic of France annexed 333 acres of Chinese soil to the overseas dominion of the great republic!

The only shred of excuse the French had for this annexation, according to the author, was the fact that they had asked the Chinese Government for the territory ever since 1912! The Chinese press raged, mass meetings were held, French goods boycotted. But all to no avail; the Chinese Government, bankrupt and unarmed, is helpless. Then there was the opium scandal, whereby the Shanghai Opium Combine, a combination of several firms of British dealers, forced the Chinese Government, through "influence" exerted over the Vice President of China, to purchase their remaining chests of opium for $20,000,000, for no reason whatever except that the combine needed money.

These "incidents" give an idea of the political difficulties thrust upon China, as unfolded by Miss La Motte. But they give no idea of the extreme readability of the descriptive parts of the book. Miss La Motte does not indulge in indignation or invective; her tone about China, if we may be permitted to use the word, is maternal. "China," she says, "enlists all your sympathies, calls forth every decent instinct you possess." It is a comforting book, moreover, for Americans to read because, of all the countries with which, mainly to her cost, China has come in contact, the United States is the only one against whom she has no just cause for complaint.

FERNANDO

FERNANDO. By John Ayscough. New York: P. J. Kenedy & Sons. $1.60.

ONE of those books that are on the border line between fiction and biography, "Fernando" is somewhat difficult to classify—or would be if it were not for the author's assurance of the truth of the narrative. The first eight or ten chapters have the semblance of fiction, except that the author every now and then identifies himself as Fernando, and concerning that person uses the first and third person impartially. But presently it becomes plain that the book is wholly, save for certain fictitious happenings in the first chapters, autobiographical. Moreover, it is in large part spiritual autobiography, and is concerned with the author's conversion from the Anglican to the Catholic Church.

John Ayscough has become known to a large circle of Americans by his several books of fiction, nearly all of which have a particular interest for readers belonging to the Catholic Church. Some of the previous ones also, notably "Gracechurch," are more or less autobiographical. In private life he is Mgr. Bickerstaffe-Drew. In "Fernando" he has used fictitious names and begins the story of his life with the marriage of his parents. How much of truth there is in the description of his father and of his grandparents and their home does not matter. From the literary viewpoint it is notably well done and brings out in vital fashion half a dozen or more strong and colorful, if not attractive, characterizations. But it would seem that in the account of his mother he has written out of his own loving memories, and the narrative of how she toiled to support and bring up in refinement and to educate Fernando and his brothers is very touching and is told with tender reverence. The story carries Fernando to his twentieth year, when, an undergraduate in Oxford, he at last gains his ardent desire and is received into the Catholic Church.

Aside from the chief concernment of the book, Fernando's long and gradually developing tendency toward Catholicism, which begins while he is still a small boy, there are many pages of charming account of his childhood, of the places where they lived, and of the people he knew, which make delightful pictures of English life in small towns and cities forty or fifty years ago. Readers of "Gracechurch" will remember its intimate portrayal of English life in a small town, somewhat reminiscent of "Cranford," not because they use the same method, but because of the similarity of material out of which both books grew. In many of the chapters of this new book they will find just the same intimate, tolerant, tenderly reminiscent pictures of an England that has passed away and will never return. And in writing about those long dead days the author has captured the wistfulness and charm of his own youth and projected it against the background of England in the mid-Victorian years.

NOTABLE BOOKS IN BRIEF REVIEW

A PADRE IN FRANCE. By George A. Birmingham. George H. Doran Company. $1.50 net.

MODESTLY, and with many touches of that same quiet, deliciously whimsical humor which makes "Spanish Gold," "General John Regan," and the rest tales of such rare delight, George A. Birmingham—who, as we all know, in private life is Canon Hannay—writes of his experiences as a Chaplain with the British Expeditionary Force in France. He never, he tells us, got within several miles of the front. The doctors admitted that he was physically capable of going to France, but only as one of those marked "P. B.," which being interpreted means "Permanent Base." There in the rear of the army Canon Hannay saw much that was well worth seeing, a great deal in particular of those men who "can look for nothing but the dull duties of the base." Many of these were old army officers, too old for field command, who had spent their lives in the army waiting for the chance which did not come until after they had waited so long that they could not avail themselves of it when it came. To these "British dug-out officers" Canon Hannay renders high praise. And with them were others, younger men who had been in the fighting and who, wounded or broken in health, clung to whatever sort of employment would enable them to aid those still at the front—draft conducting officers, officers in charge of supply trains, these men doing monotonous work well and often cheerfully.

But of the many who worked quietly, inconspicuously, and without hope of reward, there are none for whom Canon Hannay has higher praise than for the women. He was in France early in 1916, and he found the Y. M. C. A. and other organizations already doing excellent work. And though he writes broadmindedly, and with a full appreciation of its comedy aspect, of the difficulties the Y. M. C. A. people found in joining religious services so closely to concerts—at those who came for one were unable to escape the other, one gathers from his account that the British Y. M. C. A. avoided much of the criticism which, justly or unjustly, was leveled at the American organization. Nevertheless, it was by no means all smooth going, and he speaks frankly of the troubles which arose from the antagonism—an antagonism of many years' growth—existing between these Nonconformist organizations and the Church of England Chaplains. These latter, he declares, are among the few people to whom the war has done good, since it has "delivered their souls * * * from the worst form of ecclesiastical snobbery." But though he saw much good being done by men and women—why does he, by the way, always persist in saying "ladies"?—of many kinds, he gives the prize to a little group in charge of an E. F. canteen. With no great organization behind them, a kitchen of the most inconvenient sort imaginable, and a lighting system which usually gave out at important moments, they served the men with hot food and got up entertainments for them in the face of innumerable obstacles—entertainments which are very amusing to read about, but which must have been hard work to manage.

During the period of his stay in France Canon Hannay was attached to three very different camps, and of each of them he writes in a way which gives us an entertaining and vivid picture of some comparatively little known phase of the war. There is a delightful sketch of the French family with which he lodged, and, in strong contrast, another of those grim fighters from Ulster who never admitted themselves beaten. The account of the Emergency Stretcher Bearers' Camp, where the men were mostly of the "Old Contemptibles," that of the "Young Soldiers' Club," which cared for those boys who, though much under the required age, had somehow contrived to enlist and made much trouble for the authorities, until order was maintained by a committee of the boys themselves, a committee which if unchecked "would have out-Heroded the War Office itself in multiplying regulations"—these and others like them give us a glimpse of a side of the war which has been more or less ignored. As might be expected, the book is full of amusing anecdotes, from the author's description of his own trip to France to join the army, when he felt like "a new boy in a big school," and was introduced to that queer language the English used in France by a friendly young subaltern who told him that if he wanted iced water all he had to do was to go to the bar and say, "Oh! Gas us!" to his experiences crossing the Channel on the leave boat. The book deals, always interestingly, with a large number of subjects, from the usefulness of spurs as providing a bit of color, to the army's view of its Chaplains. Though Canon Hannay writes but little of his own, so to speak, professional doings, one closes the book convinced that long before he left the Emergency Stretcher Bearers' Camp the men there had changed their opinion, which at first was that they wanted "no —— parsons here."

SOCIETY OF FREE STATES

THE SOCIETY OF FREE STATES. By Dwight W. Morrow. New York: Harper & Brothers. $1.25.

SIMPLE in its plan and clear in its exposition, Mr. Morrow's little book of only 200 pages makes an unpretentious but worth-while contribution to the volume of literature that is piling up around the theme of a league of nations for the prevention of war. As he intends his book solely for popular reading, Mr. Morrow hardly does more than outline the chief phases of his subject. But he presents enough material to enable the average reader to gain a clear idea of the historical evolution of the scheme and of the form and importance it has suddenly assumed in our own day.

On the historical side of the evolution of the idea Mr. Morrow goes back to the book of Emeric Crucé, published in Paris in 1623, and tells briefly what his conceptions were, describes the "Great Design" of Henry IV. of France of about the same period, follows with an outline of William Penn's famous essay, published in 1693, and of the work of the Abbé de St. Pierre early in the following century. The plans of Alexander I. of Russia a century ago for the formation of a Confederation of Europe receive a chapter of exposition, as does also Kant's essay on Perpetual Peace, published in 1795. Another chapter tells of the work of The Hague Conferences, of the part taken in them by American delegates, and of the important achievements of jurists and diplomatists during the last three hundred years that have given theoretical or practical aid to the evolution of the conception of a society of free States. Especially interesting is a chapter on the international agencies of co-operation which the needs of commerce have forced various Governments to adopt, such as the international government of the Rhine, Danube, and other rivers, the International Postal Union, and the international adjustment of customs and bounties. The methods of the Allied Maritime Transport Council in controlling the purchase and shipment of nearly all supplies bought outside their own borders by the several nations battling against Germany during the world war, and the results gained, are explained clearly and with some detail. This chapter is full of interest because of the facts, not at all well known, which are presented, and also because of their proof of the possibility of international co-operation under the stress of great need. The author spent nearly a year working with this council, and therefore speaks concerning it with first-hand knowledge.

The interest and value of the little book are enhanced by the spirit in which Mr. Morrow has approached his task, for throughout he has presented not only theories and schemes and facts, but has sought also to make clear the evolution of ideas, the nature of the problems that had to be met at each new recurrence of the vision of world federation, and the difficulties that must be surmounted in this present time. The text of the League Covenant as it was presented to the conference last February fills an appendix and there is also a chapter of exposition. A brief bibliography follows each chapter of the volume.

PILGRIM IN PALESTINE

A PILGRIM IN PALESTINE. Being an account of journeys on foot by the first American pilgrim after General Allenby's recovery of the Holy Land. By John Finley. Illustrated. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons, 1919. $2.

DR. FINLEY'S story of his pilgrimage in Palestine is a book that appeals to so many emotions that it is difficult to convey to any one its peculiar charm. The author is a gifted man of many and widely varied activities. Here he appears in the rôle of Commissioner of the Red Cross, serving the army with the rank of Colonel; as a pilgrim journeying on foot in the Holy Land; as a poet and as an artist who has made his camera picture the past; a student of Biblical history; an idealist whose idealism is tempered by keen insight and political wisdom. It is an unusual book, the work of a mind inspired by a remarkable event. The book itself is artistic, and there is little about it to remind one of the economies of the publisher to which we have become so accustomed.

One will find in this book interesting descriptions of the author's journeys—from Jaffa to Jericho, from Beersheba to Dan, and to the lands beyond the Jordan; and of a wonderful night on the Mount of Olives. Every page is a memory of the past. But into the quiet and religious moods of the saunterer in the midst of holy places comes the stirring present. There is told the story of the dramatic entry into Jerusalem of the British Army under General Allenby, and of the campaign of that distinguished soldier whose name will go down in history as the Recoverer of the Holy Land—the man who "pierced the Berlin-Bagdad backbone of the Teuton beast, and brought on the collapse of Turkey," and who has been given the highest praise by military critics for his brilliancy of plan, his great energy in execution, and the finality of his success.

Dr. Finley entered Nazareth, the first pilgrim on foot after its capture, wearing, as he reminds us, the sign of humanity's brotherhood—the Red Cross. It is a time and scene to excite the imagination and the spirit of prophecy. He sees the Holy Land now recovered by the Christian. He thinks of its future, of the country restored and improved by the aid of modern arts, its gardens made perpetual. He hopes to see this restored Holy Land made a reservation completely internationalized, or rather "mutualized," the Jews becoming, not once more a "peculiar people," devoted to the ideals of nationalism, but helping with their genius for understanding and participating in the life of all peoples to make this, their homeland, an international homeland.

The book contains nine poems by the author which, apart from their effectiveness in expressing the mood of the book, should be noticed because of their literary merit. The longest of these, "Armageddon," was written after hearing General Allenby say, "I have just had word that my cavalry are at Armageddon. The battle of Armageddon is on." "Ain Karim" (the fountain of mercy) was inspired by the scene of the traditional birthplace of John the Baptist. "St. Dismas" was suggested by the chapel erected to the memory of St. Dismas, who was said to have been born in the village of Latron, in Palestine.

There are twenty-four illustrations in the book, many of them beautiful studies of scenes in Palestine.

ON THE U-90

PRISONER OF THE U-90. By Lieutenant Edouard Victor Isaacs, U. S. N. With an introduction by Secretary Daniels. Boston: The Houghton Mifflin Company. $1.25.

THIS is a unique record which no American could read without a glow of pride in the men of "heroic mold," to borrow Secretary Daniels's phrase from the introduction, who defended our liberties in the great war. Lieutenant Isaacs describes how the old Hamburg-American liner President Lincoln departed for Nazaire, France, on Oct. 18, 1917, on her maiden voyage as an American man-of-war. On May 31, 1918, on the return voyage of her fifth trip to France she was torpedoed. Lieutenant Isaacs describes in graphic language, without the waste of a word, exactly what happened. When the ship was sinking and the waves were already washing over the deck, he jumped on a life raft with his messenger. Fifteen minutes after the President Lincoln went down the submarine which had torpedoed her, the U-90, came to the surface. The Captain of the submarine saw Lieutenant Isaacs's stripes and ordered him aboard, thinking him the Captain of the President Lincoln. Lieutenant Isaacs said "Good-bye" to the men on the raft with him and obeyed.

Captain Remy of the submarine asked him if he were the Captain. He tried to make Lieutenant Isaacs point out the Captain to him, but, of course, the Lieutenant refused. At that moment Captain Foote of the Lincoln was pulling stroke oar in one of the lifeboats. "The manner in which he (the Captain) performed his duty," says Lieutenant Isaacs, "is one of the most striking incidents of the great war. Of the 700 souls aboard the President Lincoln, only twenty-three men and three officers were lost, and that a greater loss of life did not result must be attributed to the grand discipline which prevailed, for which he alone was responsible."

So Lieutenant Isaacs found himself a prisoner on a German submarine, the only American naval officer so captured during the war. He describes the life on board the U-90 in detail; on the whole he was treated very nicely, in princely fashion compared to the treatment he later received in German prison camps. While cruising around in the hope of getting more ships, several American destroyers sighted the U-90 and bombed her. Lieutenant Isaacs was a prey to "Hope and fear—hope that they would 'get' the submarine and fear of that very eventuality." Here is part of his description of the situation:

We were submerged but a few minutes when a dull concussion slightly

MARGARET DELAND'S latest book
Small Things

¶ A book of great little stories about the small things—the everyday episodes—both humorous and pathetic—in the experiences of one of America's best-loved women writers as a war-worker in Paris.

¶ It is nothing more pretentious than a record of the reactions of war upon little lives torn from their niches of peaceful labor and hurled from content into a din of fear and grief, of mad German things incompatible with civilization's idea of playing the game, of our American girls laboring undaunted across seas, of our doughboys marching gayly "into the dark," of the "upspringing divinenesses" that made war bearable.

¶ And in the simple beauty of their telling, these inimitable glimpses of the bright soul of France will touch the heart of every American.

WHAT MRS. DELAND SAW IN FRANCE

SMALL THINGS. By Margaret Deland. New York: D. Appleton & Co. $1.35.

IF all the multitude of books that have come out of the war could have been written with the literary skill, the searching mind and the questioning soul that Mrs. Deland has put into her simple chronicle of the people she saw and the things she learned in France literature would have been much more enriched than it has been by the mighty conflict. Her book is, indeed, a chronicle of "small things," of commonplace people, of monotonous endurances, of inconsequent happenings, of matters that, even when tragic or appalling, concerned only people of no importance. But because of her literary gifts and training she has made the chronicle absorbing and profoundly appealing, while her restless intelligence has not allowed her to stop with mere narrative but has sent her questing on all sides to find reasons for this and that and to inquire how one or another views the terrible happenings of war in their relation to life, and her sense of moral order in the universe enables her to make impressive the moral significance of little things and of little people at great moments. And therefore her anecdotes of French mothers and children with whom she talked, of American girls working in France, of French and American soldiers, of Paris under air bombardment, and of scores of other war developments will be worth reading long after hundreds of other war books have been forgotten.

Much of the effectiveness of her work is doubtless due to the literary skill with which the book is written. For her pages fairly palpitate with the sense of living people and of life at high tension, and her stories, of which there are hundreds, tragic, pathetic, dramatic, and sometimes amusing, play upon the reader's heart with insistent fingers that will not stop until they have brought response from its last depths of pity and sympathy. These numberless stories of kaleidoscopic nature, although the tragic is their most frequent color, are among the best features of the book. They are vivid, illuminating flashes that enable us to glimpse the soul of France in its entirety, that give wonderfully clear outlines of our own personal services, both fighting and helping, in France, and even cast back some rays for us to use upon ourselves at home. Most people, however, who had general knowledge of this country during 1917 and 1918 will disagree with many of her generalizations and indictments as to the American spirit during those months. For she evidently bases her conclusions and her upbraidings upon insufficient data, even sometimes upon instances selected from the narrow circles of personal acquaintance. And that, although it is not unusual, is always a very unfair and very untrustworthy method.

Mrs. Deland went to France early in 1917, accompanied by two young women, all three to work in Y. M. C. A. canteens, and the articles that compose the book begin with her departure from New York and the ocean journey, continue in Paris and in other parts of France, and the last one, having an air raid on the capital city as its background, bears the date of last September. Therefore all of them are from the viewpoint of an unfinished war, but a viewpoint that looks forward to victory and to the problems that would then have to be faced.

One reason for the continuing worth of the volume lies in the stories, not a few of them, of the unspeakable atrocities committed by the Germans upon noncombatants. For it is not well for the rest of the world to forget these things, because they arose out of some definite racial source, and, whatever it was, the rest of the world, for the sake of the future humanity, needs to keep its results in mind and to try to discover their origin. Mrs. Deland has made such an attempt, for after some peculiarly horrifying anecdotes, for whose truth she vouches, she exclaims:

> What does it mean? God knows! The terror, the horror, the sick nastiness of what they are doing is a pathological fact. We may trace the sickness back, symptom by symptom, to one cause or another; but one of the causes which seem to me to account for much of the present national degeneracy is that long-continued habit of bad manners, which especially reveals itself in the way German men regard women. * * * I am sure that the physical and mental degradation of German women is one of the roots of the spiritual degradation of German men. * * * The Prussian mind was ready to wallow in filthy cruelty, because at home, in peace, it was essentially rude. And cruelty is just the next step from rudeness.

The last chapter narrates a discussion among a number of people, French, English, and Americans, while they wait in the cellar of a house in Paris for the end of an air raid as to what should be done with the Kaiser at the close of the war. What shall be done with the ex-Kaiser and his chief aids and accomplices is still a mooted question, and therefore it is still worth while to read this chapter and to consider the various punishments and the spirit in which they were proposed by these people. Mrs. Deland tells how the discussion was lifted out of the atmosphere of personal revenge by one of the party, an Englishman, who made the others see the importance of subjecting these malefactors to the due process of law. That must be done, she quotes, because "to fail to punish crime, when the power to do so exists, is not merely to condone it; it is to make it cease to be a crime, and become a precedent." And these, surely, are words that civilization cannot afford to forget.

IN ALASKA

ADVENTURES IN ALASKA. By S. Hall Young. New York: Fleming H. Revell Company. $1.25.

THIS is a record of singular fascination. A missionary to Alaska in the "gold rush" days, the author endured all the hardships of the prospectors themselves, except that he did not labor for their rewards. To attend a meeting of the Presbytery of Yukon in March, 1912, he "mushed" (to drive a dog team) 750 miles. To thousands of golddiggers, saloonkeepers, trappers, gamblers, and Indians he was known as "The Sour Dough Preacher," "The Mushing Parson," and "The Alaska Sky Pilot." Of these nicknames Dr. Young says he is very proud, as he well may be. The book is alive with characters combining primitiveness with a high degree of sensibility and kindliness. These are not the purple spotlight romantics of Robert Service. Perhaps the most interesting chapter in the book is the one about "Bunch Grass Bill."

"Bunch Grass Bill" was a saloonkeeper of Nome. Dr. Young used to make the rounds of the saloons, asking for money to help those who were in dire straits through drink. "Bunch Grass Bill" was always generous in response and so willing to help the sick at the cost of great personal sacrifice that Dr. Young made him a member, with himself, of a relief committee. Here is Dr. Young's comment:

> Being for over six weeks the only clergyman in that whole region, I conducted all the funerals. One week I had eleven—all typhoid cases. Bill attended them all, looking after the digging of the graves and making coffins, and often acting as undertaker.
> Now, I am not setting up my saloon friend as a saint. Quite the contrary. I suppose he had been guilty of every crime mentioned in the Decalogue. He had never known any home life, but had knocked about from camp to camp of the Western frontiers ever since boyhood. His ideas of morality, therefore, were very vague. * * * Rumor said that he had the blood of more than one man on his hands. * * *
> But to those of us in the raw camp of Nome who witnessed Bill's untiring kindness and self-sacrifice during those weeks of distress, his faults faded into the background behind the light of his many good deeds.

When Dr. Young himself fell ill of the typhoid it was "Bunch Grass Bill" who saved his life. At the point of a gun he ordered the owner of the only cow in the camp to give Dr. Young milk without added ingredients. The book is full of humorous incidents like these. For example, there was the first church service conducted in Nome, in a loft over a store:

> The floor of Bruce's store was cluttered with Eskimo muckluks, bales of hair-seal skins, and other unsavory articles; and an old Eskimo woman, who had her lower lip and chin tattooed downward in streaks, after the fashion of these people, sat among the skins, chewing walrus hides and shaping them into soles for muckluks, while the congregation was gathering. One usher received the people at the store door, steered them carefully between bales and skins, and headed them to another, who helped them up the steep stairway, while a third seated them. We had a good congregation and a rousing meeting. Our choir was one of the best I ever heard. Our organist and leader was Dr. Humphrey, a dentist, who had been director of a large chorus and choir; Mr. Beebe, our chief baritone, had sung in the choir of St. Paul's Episcopal Church of Oakland, Cal.; and there were other professionals. I give these details as a typical beginning in a frontier camp. There is always fine talent of all sorts in a raw gold town.

Among the memorable things in the book are the records of journeys made with dogs in Winter over vast stretches of snow-covered country and frozen rivers. There are exciting stories of bear and walrus hunts. Dr. Young's "parishioners" included Eskimos and Indians, and there are stories of these. The book has a flavor all its own, revealing a free, vigorous life, a boundless virgin country, and a hale and striking personality.

TRY FOR JUNIOR ACCOUNTANCY OCTOBER, 1919, AND FOR SENIOR ACCOUNTANT, OCTOBER, 1920.

October 15 to November 15 is the period during which one-fourth of the year's business changes, readjustments, and building up of staffs are made.

If you have a faculty for figures and the crude stuff for the making of an accountant, there is just about time between now and October 15th this year for you, thru suitable intensive training—during your spare hours at home—to qualify for a Junior Accountancy position that will pay at least $35 a week.

And ample time to qualify before October, 1920, for position of Senior Accountant, Auditor, or Income Tax Expert, at a salary of at least $75 a week—with possibilities of more than twice that amount.

It is only a question of raw ability and industry, a resolute purpose to devote five spare home hours a week to intensive training in accordance with the most successful business-training system ever devised, under the tutelage of a corps of eminent Certified Public Accountants who are renowned as practical teachers.

We have given hundreds of ambitious, earnest men and women the start that has put them over the top, and have their records to point to with just pride. We can do as much for you if you are made of the right stuff. It is worth your while to investigate.

For consistent returns in our real estate advertising we have depended upon The New York Times. It is the medium in which we have used the most space.

One of the most satisfactory features of the returns from The Times is our ability to secure buyers that are in a position financially to purchase the type of property that we have to sell.

The New York Times:

About seventy-five per cent. of our inquiries from newspaper advertising have come directly from The New York Times and these have proved a very high-class clientele who have in a great many cases been purchasers and lessees of the very finest and most expensive properties we handle in and about Montclair.

In our opinion The New York Times outranks all other papers in the East for results that really count and produce business.

The New York Times:

Although we have not advertised in The New York Times regularly until about one year ago, we find that the results are satisfactory in every respect.

The replies to our advertisements are of an excellent class and mean business. They are not merely "curiosity seekers" as a good many are who reply to real estate advertisements.

Inspect Queens Highways.

Alfred M. Barrett, Commissioner of Highways, Borough of Queens; F. H. Shepheard, Highway Engineer, and C. U. Powell, Topographical Engineer, were the guests of the Queens Borough Chamber of Commerce on a trip of inspection of some of the proposed new main connecting highways. The trip was followed by a dinner meeting held at the Jamaica Country Club.

Among the highways which the Queens Chamber of Commerce is cooperating with the borough administration to have built and which were inspected by the committees are (a) Interboro Parkway, which will connect the Eastern Parkway in Brooklyn through Cypress Hills Cemetery with Forest Parkway in Queens Borough, furnishing a through highway for automobiles that will relieve traffic on Jamaica Avenue; (b) Jamaica Bay Boulevard, extending southward from Woodhaven across Jamaica Bay to Rockaway Beach. This will provide a highway shortening to the distance by ten miles from Manhattan and Brooklyn to the Rockaway Peninsula; (c) the conduit parkway to be built on the property owned by the City of New York on what is known as the acqueduct, extending southeasterly from Brooklyn through Queens County into Nassau County; (d) Rockaway Turnpike, extending south from Jamaica to Far Rockaway, skirting the easterly shore of Jamaica Bay.

The last two highways will not only shorten the distance from all parts of the city to the Rockaway section, but will relieve the present traffic congestion on the Merrick Road.

SINGLE TAXERS MEET HERE.

Sixteen States Represented at the Party's First National Convention.

Delegates from sixteen States where permanent organization have been perfected are attending the first national convention of the Single Tax Party of the United States, which was held yesterday at the headquarters of the Single Tax Party of New York, 246 West Fourteenth Street. The States represented were Maine, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Delaware, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, Ohio, Michigan, Oregon, Washington, North Dakota, and Texas. Proxies were presented from California.

James A. Robinson of Philadelphia, National Single Tax Organizer, said that committees were being formed in the remaining States and that he expected the party would present a ticket at the Presidential election next year.

It was stated that the Single Tax Party would take part in municipal, State, and national elections as a non-fusing organization, putting a complete Aldermanic and Assembly ticket in the field this Fall, and in 1920 a State as well as a national ticket.

Lounsbury, twenty-two acres on the southeast corner of King Street and Round Hill Road, Greenwich, Conn. This property adjoins that of J. Rich Steers and has a frontage of 645 feet on King Street.

Queens Building Record.

Building operations planned during the month of May in Queens, according to the records just compiled at the Building Bureau in Queens, broke all records and the filings have assumed almost the totals of the most favored years before the war. A comparison of the two months is as follows:

	No. of Buildings.	Estimated Cost.
1919	978	$5,435,270
1918	313	1,571,465
Increase	665	$3,853,805

The largest operations in the borough as shown by the filings are those of the Jackson Heights Apartment Corporation. This company has filed plans for twelve four-story brick apartments to accommodate eighteen families each, at a cost of $436,000, and for three four-story brick apartments for thirteen families, each to cost $171,000. They will be erected on Twenty-seventh Street, at Jackson Heights.

The White Automobile Company has filed plans for the construction of a two-story brick garage and service station at the southwest corner of Thomson Avenue and School Street, Long Island City. It will be 200x419, and will cost $350,000.

Bauer & Stier, Inc., have filed plans for thirteen two-story brick dwellings to be erected on Gates Avenue south of Doubleday Street, Ridgewood, at a cost of $71,500.

$250,000 Brooklyn Hospital.

Shampan & Shampan, architects, have filed plans in the Bureau of Buildings for a new four-story and basement fireproof hospital building to be erected on the south side of Forty-fifth Street, 80 feet west of Seventeenth Avenue, Brooklyn. The building, which is to be 48 by 135 feet in size, is to be situated upon a plot 180 feet front by 100.2 feet deep, constructed thoroughly modern and equipped with all instruments and appliances known to modern medical science and will contain 100 beds. Ground has already been broken, and it is expected that the structure will be completed for occupancy next Fall.

The exterior of the building, which is designed in the modern Italian rennaissance style of architecture, will have a background of dark cherry color sand finish face brick and trimmed with white marble. The Zion Hospital, which has its present quarters at 2,140 Cropsey Avenue, Bensonhurst, was founded Sept. 8, 1915. For a short time Borough Park was the home of the institution. It then moved to its present quarters overlooking picturesque Gravesend Bay.

Although the present location is ideal, the hospital's growth has made it mandatory to seek more room. The officers of the hospital are Leo. D. Greenfield, President, and Dr. Henry M. Kalvin, Chairman of the Building Committee.

HISTORICAL SOUVENIRS.

It has etchings of the most famous battlefields in which the Americans took part in France, including St. Mihiel, Vaux, Fismes, Argonne Forest—an American album.—Advt.

Sage Foundation Homes Co.

Forest Hills Gardens
FIFTEEN MINUTES FROM PENN. STATION

LAND is the most secure of all investments, therefore it is called, in contradistinction to other types of investment, REAL ESTATE.

TRANSPORTATION and accessibility are the fundamental principles that enhance the value of REAL ESTATE. Improved transportation has brought Forest Hills Gardens within fifteen minutes of the centre of Manhattan.

BUILDING operations have been resumed. The increased cost of building is offset by the low price of the land. Many people are purchasing plots and having plans prepared. Our belief that prices are staple—even though higher than pre-war prices—is confirmed by the fact that the SAGE FOUNDATION HOMES CO. is at present building 35 houses, costing over three-quarters of a million dollars. We urge upon those contemplating owning a home the early selection of a building site.

THE REAL ESTATE business is in a better position now than at any time since 1907, therefore land prices are sure to increase.

The net income is divided pro rata among the tenants, who are the owners and who control the property they occupy, the rentals to be paid and the expenses to be incurred. Rentals cannot be raised and your lease will continue in force just so long as you care to continue in control of the premises you occupy. There is nothing complex about the plan. You are invited to make a personal inspection of the apartments. ADEQUATE HOUSING LABOR MARKET AID

Queens Manufacturers Confident Better Living Quarters Would Help Solve Employment Question.

TENANTS STILL COMPLAIN

Mayor's Committee Continues to Receive Letters Citing Instances of Rent Profiteering.

The lack of housing in the Borough of Queens has become so marked that the manufacturers there have requested the Queens Chamber of Commerce to assist them in finding homes for their employes, many of whom have to travel long distances to reach their work. In compliance with these requests, it is announced by the Chamber of Commerce that a special appeal for assistance is being made to builders, bankers, brokers, and financial institutions in New York City. The manufacturers believe that if adequate living accommodations are provided for their employes in the vicinity of their plants it will help to stabilize the labor market and thereby save a large part of the expense of hiring and training employes.

In order to bring this fact to the attention of those who are in a position to aid in the construction of homes a special issue of "Queensborough," the monthly publication of the Queens Chamber of Commerce, will be published in a few days, and will set forth not only the new building developments which are now under way for factories and residences, but the necessity for a great increase in the construction of homes to house the employes of manufacturing plants.

To further the movement an appeal, which it is estimated will be signed by representatives of concerns employing approximately 75,000 men and women in the borough, will be printed in the "Construction" number of "Queensborough."

The Mayor's Committee on Rent Profiteering continues to receive letters relating the acts of profiteering landlords and the miseries suffered as a result. Thomas Divine of 985 Madison Street, Brooklyn, a blind man with a wife and three children, wrote that he had received notice to vacate on June 30. He said his rent was paid up to July 1, and the family had no other place in view into which to move, and that he knew of no cause for the serving of the notice. He asked the Mayor's assistance and advice.

Three women tenants of 198 Brown Place, The Bronx, who with five other tenants were dispossessed on Monday, complained to the Mayor's Committee yesterday against the City Marshal, Charles J. Mosher, who dispossessed them, and also against Abraham Gold, the owner, and Anna Moll, the alleged lessee. Mrs. Esther Marcus, one of the three women, told the committee that she had five small children and that when the Marshal came she was not given time to dress them and that they were put out on the street almost naked. She said that she and the children had since been obliged to sleep in the street. Mrs. Lena Motner's apartment was taken into by the Marshal, one of her neighbors said. When Mrs. Motner returned and found her apartment had been forcibly entered she became excited and expostulated with the Marshal, who, she said, had her arrested and arraigned in the Harlem Court, where she was held in $500 bail, and her three children were turned over to the Children's Society. She said that she had spent Monday night in prison and that her trial was set for today.

The third tenant, Mrs. Ray Hirschfeld, said that she had five children who were also turned out on the street without giving her time to dress them and that since then they had all been obliged to sleep in the street. All the tenants said that the houses were unspeakably dirty, and that the lessee did nothing toward cleaning them. They declared that it was the custom of the lessee to burn garbage in the furnace, thus causing fumes, and that garbage was spilled in the halls and was allowed to lie there. They bitterly complained of their treatment by both the owner and the lessee, and asserted that obnoxious names had been applied to them. The Mayor's Committee has sent for the Marshal and his conduct will be investigated.

Queens Homes in Demand.

The Chamber of Commerce of the Borough of Queens is receiving so many requests from the manufacturers of the borough for assistance in finding living accommodations for their employes that it is making a special appeal to the builders, bankers, brokers, and financial institutions in New York City to provide adequate living accommodations in Queens for the thousands of employes of the existing and new industrial establishments.

Manufacturers in Queens Borough believe that if accommodations are provided for their employes in the vicinity of their plants it will help to stabilize the labor market and thereby save a large part of the expense of hiring and training employes.

In order to bring these facts to the attention of those who are in a position to aid in the construction of homes, a special issue of Queensborough, the monthly publication of the Queens Chamber of Commerce, is now being prepared which will set forth not only the new building developments which are now under way for factories and residences but the necessity for a great increase in the construction of homes in Queens Borough to house the employes of the manufacturing plants. Thousands of extra copies of this issue will be printed for distribution throughout the city.

New Building Company Formed.

Acting upon advance information regarding the trend of the future building material price and supply market, Ford H. Dow, Treasurer of the Dow Service Daily Building Reports, has completed the organization of the Dovale Homes Company, for the purpose of helping to alleviate a part of the present shortage of high-class homes, costing from $7,500 to $25,000.

Associated with Mr. Dow are Harold Van Buskirk, the architect, and Benjamin E. Leavin, the builder. The first four houses of a large number are actually under way, excavations for them having started last week. The houses in each case are being built for private owners, and while the work now under way is at Bronxville, the plans call for a large number of fine residences at various points in Westchester.

$200,000,000 PLAN TO DEVELOP HARBOR FACILITIES BY DREDGING NEW JERSEY "FLATS"

The largest port development project yet undertaken by a private enterprise for Greater New York, one that will treble the facilities for commerce by creating a wharf frontage which equals the distance from the Battery to Twenty-third Street, and will ultimately cover 1,100 acres and cost $200,000,000, has just been announced. The detailed plans, formulated after exhaustive surveys, test bores and sounding, and studies by the engineers of James Stewart & Co., have received the approval of W. G. Besler, President of the Central Railroad of New Jersey, and C. C. Loomis, President of the Lehigh Valley.

Others who have been concerned with their working out are A. H. Smith, Regional Director of the Eastern Railway Division; General William Black, Chief of the Engineering Corps of the United States Army, and General George W. Goethals, formerly head of the Quartermaster Corps of the army. The plans are now being studied by the officers of the Lehigh Valley, Jersey Central, Baltimore & Ohio, Delaware, Lackawanna & Western, and the Pennsylvania, these roads being the ones which would be afforded terminal facilities.

Not only does the improvement contemplate these extensive terminal facilities, but also includes an intensive development for water commerce, coal loading, and varied industries on a vast tract of shoal land now idle and wasted in the upper bay. The site on the Jersey Flats embraces land under shallow water owned by the Lehigh Valley and Jersey Central Railroads, together with strong realty interests, extending from Bedlow's Island to the Pennsylvania Railroad's Greenville terminal, including the solid rock reef known as Oyster Island.

Navigable water areas would be greatly increased by excavation, and vast areas up to this time idle and worthless will be turned to intense industrial utilization by the development.

The plan teems with mechanical facilities of the most modern and approved types of efficiency. In coal storage alone a capacity of 1,200,000 tons is provided for, including space for 8,000 coal cars, with such up-to-date handling machinery as to afford a close and readily available supply of fuel that would safeguard the metropolitan district against any recurrence of the coal famine of the Winter of 1917-18.

Coaling facilities on the direct route of the harbor channel are provided, capable of filling the largest ocean-going ships within three or four hours' time, the coaling dockage giving room for fifty 500-foot ships. Other notable features are the mechanical dumping towers, coal thawing plant, coal storage area, oil supply plant, ship repair plant, dry docks, warehouses, grain elevators, barge terminals, factory buildings, car storage tracks, gravity switching yard, team tracks, car vehicle interchange, locomotive roundhouse, ferry-trolley terminals, cold storage warehouses, railroad repair shops, elevated roadways, pier storage sheds, open pier storage area, ground storage area, and a free landing zone.

The coal loading plant is located on the bulkhead along the outer edge of the tract on deep water close to the main channel, convenient to vessels inbound or outbound. The most modern fueling facilities in existence are provided for, including elevated running tracks, steel bins with a capacity of 120,000 tons, and traveling towers and cranes capable of delivering coal into both sides of a vessel at a rate of 10,000 tons an hour, or faster than it could possibly be stowed below decks. Back of the bins an elongated open ground area provides storage for 600,000 tons, bordered by mechanical facilities for its quick reclamation.

Quick and efficient direct methods have been devised for handling cargo between steamships and barges and freight cars; between floating carriers, cars and drays, and between platforms, stations, and warehouses and drays. Absence of modern facilities, with limited space of platforms and warehouses, has resulted in congestion and excessive costs and difficulties in the handling of New York's domestic traffic as well as its export trade.

In the vast plant projected most exhaustive provision has been made for these prime needs, with transfer of freight from car to vehicle at the terminal site instead of at the Manhattan piers and bulkheads. The unloading platforms are equipped with automatic conveyors, and gravity is utilized to the maximum in all handling to warehouses, cars and trucks.

The systematized facilities are arranged to co-ordinate with the possible future introduction of the so-called "store-door delivery" system by the railroads. A special ferry terminal, with ample roadways, will give ready transportation for vehicles to any part of the harbor district.

Another feature is the provision for the repair of ships, ship machinery and railroad equipment. Dire need of greater ship repair facilities has been demonstrated in recent months, and harbor traffic was seriously impeded during the war by the idleness of a large proportion of tugs awaiting drydock space. These new facilities include berthing space for twelve 500-foot vessels, floating drydocks with 4,000 linear feet space, and a graving dock able to receive a 1,000-foot ship. The last will make it possible for ships to lay up for overhauling without going to Boston or Newport News, as has been the case up to the present.

Proposed Improvements to the Waterfront Properties of the Lehigh Valley Railroad and the Central Railroad of New Jersey on New York Harbor Between Jersey City and Bayonne.

CALLING MORTGAGES.

Demand for Full Payment Now on the Decrease.

Instances of harshness in the treatment of mortgage debtors indicated by the calling and foreclosing of mortgages are not as frequent as they were a few months ago. The improved financial showing that real property has made consequent upon the practical suspension of building operations, the rapidly increasing demand for usable space of all kinds, and the very considerable increase in rents have had their influence, of course, in allaying apprehension in panicky minds; but the steady growth of ethical and patriotic sentiment in the minds of those most vitally concerned in such matters has doubtless been the more powerful factor in suppressing possibly oppressive and selfish action on the part of mortgage creditors.

The President of one of the larger lending institutions that hold intermediary relations between many of the borrowers and lenders in the real estate field, and who keeps constant watch on the course of business, said yesterday that from an average of about 10 per cent. last year the demand for full payment of maturing mortgages which passed under his observation had declined to less than half that percentage thus far this year, and the number showed a slow but persistent downward tendency.

Still, considering the conditions brought about by the war, the number of those who are insisting upon payment in full is uncomfortably large. The greater proportion of those who take this course are known to be holders of mortgages who do not need the money, but who think they could invest it to greater profit in other lines of investment.

The technical, legal right to demand payment of their loans is not questioned, and in normal times would not be unwelcome, for the refunding of mortgage loans is one of the primary functions of the market which the title, mortgage and life insurance companies and savings banks have always been ready and qualified to perform.

But these are not normal times. The operations of the Government, in carrying on the war, have sapped all the sources of credit of the real property market, have absorbed, by its Liberty Loans and other demands for money, all the current funds hitherto available for such refunding operations and have imposed upon lenders of all classes moral obligations and duties of forbearance and consideration toward their debtors.

The position taken by the vastly greater proportion of the larger lending institutions in this matter is well expressed in a letter by the Bowery Savings Bank, written by Controller W. E. Knox. The letter is as follows:

"Gentlemen: Replying to your communication of recent date as to our attitude in regard to renewals of mortgages, we have taken the position that this is a very poor time to disturb the owners of real estate when it can possibly be avoided. Property owners are laboring under so many disadvantages just at present that we have refrained from calling any loans, and have refrained also from asking for partial payments, excepting in cases where it is absolutely necessary.

"In cases where such payments are necessary, we have been continuing our loans with the understanding that the borrowers pay whatever amount is called for in installments, which in some cases we have spread out over a period of five years. We have no hard and fast rule in the matter, but treat each individual case on its merits, and are always inclined to give the borrower every possible help.

"In the present condition of the market, if we insisted that payments be made in a lump sum, we feel quite sure that we would be obliged to take the property under foreclosure, and we are strongly of the opinion that the owner himself can probably manage the property to much better advantage than we could. Where a man keeps his interest and taxes paid up and maintains his property in good condition, it would be a hardship to call a loan and force him to attempt to place his mortgage elsewhere, for, as you know, there are practically no institutions lending, and the owner of the property would be in a most embarrassing situation.

"Very truly yours,

"W. E. KNOX, Comptroller."

The Bowery Savings Bank is well known as one of the oldest, largest, and most conservative among the great savings institutions in the city. Its policy is not different in the above particular from that of all its colleagues. They all realise that the times call for conservative rather than radical or drastic action in their particular field of investment; for co-operation in maintaining the standards of safety and security that in times of peace have always distinguished real property securities and investments in this city, and that can only be shaken now by a selfish and inconsiderate refusal to extend and continue mortgage loans.

Shore Lots at Auction.

An auction sale of lots and houses of Rockaway coast property is to be held by Joseph P. Day Saturday, July 5, at Edgemere at 2 P. M., under a large tent on the premises, by order of the stockholders, to liquidate the holdings of the Scheer Realty Company, which comprise 200 lots on the Boulevard, Beach Thirty-ninth, Fortieth, Forty-first, Forty-second, and Forty-third Streets, Edgemere, within a few blocks of the Long Island Railroad station. The lots are a short distance from the Atlantic Ocean and a number of them face on Jamaica Bay. Most of the lots have sewer, water, gas, and sidewalks.

The property in Arverne comprises seven cottages and five vacant plots, two of which are on the Atlantic Ocean and have riparian rights, on Boulevard, Beach Seventy-second, Seventy-third, Seventy-fourth, and Seventy-fifth Streets.

The houses to be offered are as follows:

Northeast corner Cedar Avenue and Rockaway Beach Boulevard, a three-story frame residence, containing nineteen rooms and two baths, electric light and gas, size of plot, 101.60 by 115 by irregular; 14 North Beach Seventy-fourth Street, a two-story frame cottage, containing nine rooms and bath, steam heat, gas and electricity, size of plot, 35.25 by 100 by 40; 13 and 14 North Beach Seventy-third Street, two two-story frame cottages, containing five rooms each, size of plot, 72 by 100; 11 South Beach Seventy-second Street, a three-story frame cottage, containing fifteen rooms, two baths, steam heat, gas and electricity, size of plot, 80 by 86.31; 17 Beach Seventy-third Street, a two-story frame residence, containing twelve rooms and bath, steam heat, gas, and electricity, size of plot, 80 by 100; 19 South Beach Seventy-third Street, a two-story frame residence, containing eleven rooms and bath, furnace heat, gas, and electricity, size of plot, 80 by 100; also a one-story bathing pavilion north of the Board Walk, at South Beach Seventy-second Street, containing seventy-two bathhouses.

Westchester County Sales.

G. H. Warner has sold his estate of 105 acres known as Rockmore, situated on the Whippoorwill Road, in the town of New Castle, and six miles north of White Plains, to Max Loewenthal, Vice President of the United States Rubber Reclaiming Company. The property was held at $150,000. Chauncey B. Griffen & Co. negotiated the sale.

Prince & Ripley sold a portion of the famous old Watt Street, on Fenimore Road, Scarsdale, N. Y., to George G. Allen, Vice President of the British-American Tobacco Company, Limited, of New York City. The sale includes the famous old mansion, which was originally built by Green Wright, at that time a well-known New York City builder, who occupied it for some years until he sold it to the late William G. Hitchcock, who in turn transferred it to Thomas L. Watt in 1890. Mr. Watt invested over $1,000,000 in improvements to the house and grounds, making it one of the show places of Westchester County.

The Otil Realty Company, Inc., purchased from R. B. Dula about six and one-fourth acres of land at White Plains, N. Y. This corporation has proceeded to make a subdivision of fifteen lots, and has already contracted for the erection of five modern dwellings, to be ready for occupancy about Oct. 1.

Horner & Co., Inc., were the brokers in the transaction.

L. Covert sold for George Cobb a plot on Eastern Boulevard, opposite the Westchester Country Club, to L. A. Andrews, who expects to build on same.

The farm estate of Mrs. Elise Orgies, on Ashforth Avenue, between Scarsdale and Hartsdale, containing approximately sixty-five acres of land, has been sold to a client of George Howe.

David Stewart sold for the Sagamore Development Company at Sagamore Park a plot, fronting 142 feet on Avon Road, Bronxville; also, for the Lawrence Park Realty Company, a plot, 50 by 100, in Bronxville, to William D. Kraft.

Buyers for Laurelton Homes.

That the demand for houses is a real one has been demonstrated by the success of the offering of apartments and detached homes for occupancy Oct. 1 by the Hathron Homes Corporation at Laurelton, L. I.

The apartment houses originally projected by this company have been insufficient to meet the demands of prospective tenants, and the company is broadening its operations to meet this demand. The same thing has proved true of detached homes, and inquiries for these have come not only from the City of New York, but from many States, even as far west as Ohio and south as far as North Carolina.

The apartment rentals have been fixed at $10 a room, and the apartments themselves are so designed that each room has an outside exposure, with four apartments to a house, the buildings being of residential type in a square one block from the Laurelton station, surrounded by fine old trees and natural advantages seldom available in apartment house construction. Each apartment will have its own garden and garage, if desired, and every convenience for modern housekeeping will be included.

Under the company's plan for home building any homeseeker with $1,000 and satisfactory references can select his own site and have a home built to his order from plans especially made for him, to suit his particular taste and requirements, the balance, if desired, being payable on a monthly rental basis. Owing to the very great demand for homes and apartments and the limited time for their construction, no leases or orders for houses will be accepted by the company for occupancy Oct. 1 unless the prospective tenant or purchaser has selected his apartment or agreed upon plans prior to July 1.

Board to Take Recess.

Captain John P. Lee, Chairman, announces that the Board of Appeals and the Board of Standards and Appeals will take a recess from July 1 to July 22, with the permission of Mayor Hylan. The office, however, will be open, as usual, for the receipt of appeals and petitions.

In order that this recess might not cause any delay in building operations, these boards held twelve sessions in June and will hold two sessions on July 1, disposing of all cases filed up to June 20.

William Wirt Mills, Secretary, reports that these boards, starting the year with 70 cases pending, have received 439 new appeals and petitions and have reopened 31 cases, making a total of 540 cases.

The Board of Appeals held thirty-seven meetings in the six months and the Board of Standards and Appeals twelve meetings, and disposed of 522 cases, leaving 38 cases pending, 25 of which are to be disposed of on July 1, so that the boards enter the second half of the year with no unfinished business except cases filed after June 20 and a few cases in which further data are to be secured pending decision. In 87% of the 522 cases relief was granted to property owners.

In all cases the action of the board was recorded in The Bulletin on the Tuesday following the meeting, and this action was certified the same day to the administrative officials and to the appellant.

WORLD'S BIGGEST ROAD JOB.

Nothing in History to Touch America's $500,000,000 1919 Program.

The Federal aid road building program for 1919 is the most stupendous in the history of the world. The expenditures for road construction for the year are likely to reach $500,000,000. Plans have been made for the construction of continuous highway systems, the States through which the highways are to pass co-operating with each other as never before. Improved roads will not terminate at State lines, but will run from one large marketing centre to another.

More than $45,000,000 worth of motor trucks, to be used in road construction work, will be distributed by the Secretary of Agriculture through the Bureau of Public Roads to the State Highway Departments. These trucks, about 20,000 in number, have been declared surplus by the War Department, and all that the States must do to acquire them is to pay the loading and freight charges. The trucks range in capacity from two to five tons, 11,000 of them are new, and all are declared to be in serviceable condition. They will be apportioned to the States only upon request of the State Highway Departments on the basis of a request received from the respective States with the apportionment provided in the Federal aid law approved in 1916. The requirements of the law are such that none of the trucks will be distributed to counties or individuals.

Further interest in the nation-wide need for good roads is shown by the fact that shortly before the last session of Congress adjourned that body made an extra appropriation of $200,000,000 in the Post Office Appropriation bill to meet the Federal part of the road-building program. This is the largest appropriation ever made by any Government for a similar purpose.

Good roads are too often looked upon as a matter of interest to country people and automobile pleasure riders only, say officials of the Road Bureau, but the man who never gets out of sight of the tall buildings, as well as the man who has yet to see a city skyscraper, should be a booster for better roads. Highways are used in transporting practically every article of food at some stage in its journey to the consumer's table. Bad roads add to the cost of transportation, but good roads cut marketing costs.

From the time when farm products were first hauled in wagons to markets there has been an interest in better roads as a means of reducing the cost of transportation, but improved highways mean more now because of the extensive use of motor trucks in hauling products from the farm to the railroad station or direct to the city markets. Trucks are not only replacing horse transportation, but in many cases they are supplementing and even doing the work of railroads. In fact, motor trucks offer a solution of modern transportation problems, but roads built only for horse-drawn vehicles or light automobiles will break down under heavy motor traffic.

Maintenance of thousands of miles of roads so that the enormous Government and commercial truck traffic of the last two years could move has taxed the abilities and called forth every energy and plan on the part of highway officials. In many States officials found themselves without sufficient funds to handle properly the repair and rebuilding work necessary. Nearly all of them had to struggle under the handicap of an insufficient labor supply, and all had to meet the increased cost of labor and material.

Only a few States were unaffected by the restrictions on the supply and transportation of materials which had to be brought from a distance. None escaped the difficulties which followed the great and rapid increase in traffic at this country's entrance into the war. From New England to the Pacific Coast new demands were made upon the highways, and unusual conditions developed everywhere in maintenance and construction. In several States high-type roads, which had originally been constructed without sufficient foundation to meet the new demands, had to be rebuilt, and part of this construction work was carried on while the heavy traffic was kept moving.

The extensive use of motor trucks for transportation during wartime has emphasized the possibilities of well-built roads as a means of marketing farm and other products. Solving road problems when there was a constant procession of heavily loaded trucks traveling over them has been a great lesson to road officials, which will be put to good use in peace times.

HOMES FOR FIFTEEN HUNDRED FAMILIES. BEING BUILT IN BOROUGH OF THE BRONX

Building Boom Predicted in the Bronx, Where Official Reports Show That the Estimated Cost of New Structures for First Six Months of the Present Year Has More Than Doubled Total Record of 1918

In anticipation of the approaching building boom, real estate men and apartment builders in the Borough of the Bronx are making a close, advanced study of the available opportunities along the line of the White Plains Avenue elevated extension to within a few blocks of Mount Vernon.

This is an eventuality to have been expected as the earliest demand for lots, under the existing housing conditions, will be for those of moderate value, in order to offset the present high construction costs, which it is conceded will not be reduced to lower levels for some years to come.

In January of the present year, at a time when, except to the extreme optimist, there seemed but little probability of an early resumption of building activity anywhere, Eugene H. Rosenquest, former President of the Bronx Board of Trade, expressed the positive opinion that before the Summer was well under way there would be an unmistakable and strong revival of building activities in the Borough of the Bronx, the building of homes, especially in the territory adjacent to the borough's new transit routes.

Any such prediction as to the 1919 building construction outlook seemed groundless, especially in view of the fact that during the whole of the year just closed, 1918, the sum total of the costs of all the new buildings for which plans had been filed had amounted to but $3,901,900, an almost insignificant figure for the Bronx. However, there was a slight indication that somewhat of a building revival was on the way, since, of that $3,901,900, the plans filed in the first six months had accounted for but $933,450.

A Prophecy Fulfilled.

Fulfillment of the January prophecy as to this early building revival in the Bronx is furnished by an inspection of the records of the Building Bureau of the borough, which shows that in the five months ended May 31, 161 plans were filed for 216 new structures, at total estimated costs amounting to $4,739,790, while from June 1 to 20 there were filed 45 additional sets of plans, bearing cost estimates of $2,054,900, bringing the grand total of costs to $6,794,690 for the period between Jan. 1 and June 20, 1919, nearly twice as much as was involved in new buildings during the entire year 1918.

Moreover, a study of the numbers of plans filed demonstrated a steady monthly increase in volume—10 in January, for $184,940; 19 in February, for $248,900; 21 in March, for $353,350; 58 in April, for $2,154,550; 58 in May, for $1,798,050, and 45 between June 1 and June 20, for $2,054,900.

As to the types of buildings concerned, the plans for apartments far outnumbered the plans for other structures, as had also been forecast, the costs of the dwellings approximating $4,000,000 of the grand total of $6,794,690.

The apartment houses concerned are planned to accommodate 1,454 families, while the one, two, and three-family houses will take care of 97 families, making for new housing for a total of 1,551 families now under way in the Bronx.

Centres of Activity.

The centre of this building activity, as was forecast, is in the West Bronx section, along the entire stretch of the Grand Concourse and University Avenue, and the high-class residential territory served by the Jerome Avenue subway extension. Over $2,500,000 is involved in the apartments and dwellings under way in this part of the Bronx.

Along the White Plains Avenue subway extension, there is also notable building activity, especially in the erection of private dwellings, about $250,000 being involved in the many structures under way.

Nor is the East Bronx, along the route of the Westchester Avenue subway extension, to be overlooked, the sum of $300,000 being involved in the dwellings being erected there.

The following tabular presentation of the plans for new buildings and alterations filed with the Bronx Building Bureau during the five months ended May 31, 1919, provide interesting testimony as to the general character of the big building construction revival now under way in the borough:

Development Follows Old Highways.

As in the old days before the Bronx was made a part of the City of New York by the Act of Annexation in 1895, White Plains Avenue is today the direct route from the lower Bronx through Mount Vernon and to White Plains.

The thoroughfare of today is the old highway of the Revolutionary period that runs along the high ridge which formed the backbone of the East Bronx between the Bronx River and Long Island Sound. It is today, as then, the line of least resistance because of the construction of the White Plains Avenue extension of the Manhattan and Bronx subway system, north from 177th Street to within a few blocks of the Mount Vernon city line.

Previous to the Act of Annexation in 1895 this entire section of the Bronx was composed of a number of old-established villages, many of which dated back to the early fifties.

Among these were Olinville No. 1, which occupied the area north of Gun Hill Road, or 210th Street, along White Plains Road, and Olinville No. 2, south of the Gun Hill Road, between White Plains Road and the Bronx River. In this same general section an early settlement was formed by the Swiss lacemakers, who came to this country and organized the Associated Lacemakers Company, by whom Bronxwood Park, between Burke Avenue and East 218th Street, was developed.

One of the largest of these many village settlements was Wakefield, which occupied the area on both sides of White Plains Road, west of the Bronx River, and east to Barnes Avenue, from about 214th to 236th Street. North of this point, Jacksonville, one of the earlier settlements, ran from 236th to 238th Street, along White Plains Road, North of Jacksonville, and extending to the Mount Vernon city line, west of the White Plains Road, was the old settlement known as Washingtonville.

Edenwald lay east of the White Plains Road, between Baychester Avenue and the Mount Vernon city line.

Any study of the district today would be incomplete without giving due consideration to the fact that each and all of these old settlements dated back to the time when this section of Westchester, now the Bronx, had only the service of the New York and Harlem Branch of the New York Central Railroad. There were no subways, elevated railways, or trolley lines at that time.

Building on White Plains Avenue.

The territory that it is expected will be affected first by the approaching building boom is that which is directly contiguous to the White Plains Avenue extension of the subway system and north of the Bronx and Pelham Parkway, with stations at Pelham Parkway, Allerton Avenue, Burke Avenue, Gun Hill Road, or 210th Street, East 219th Street, East 225th Street, East 233d Street, East 238th Street, and East 243d Street.

The change from the White Plains elevated to the original subway is made at the 177th Street station, and the change to the New York, Westchester & Boston Road at the 180th Street station. The White Plains Avenue "L" connects also with the Second and Third Avenue "Ls," Manhattan, Lexington Avenue subway, Lenox Avenue subway, and the Jerome Avenue "L" at Mott Avenue.

At Gun Hill Road, upon the completion of the Westchester Avenue extension, there will also be a union station connecting with the Third Avenue elevated road, which has its terminus at Bronx Park, near Southern Boulevard.

It is this combination of high altitude and general excellence of rapid transit facilities that is responsible for the prevailing opinion that the next big building boom in the East Bronx will be encouraged along the line of the White Plains Avenue elevated extension of the Manhattan and Bronx subway systems.

Increases Capital to $4,000,000.

In view of the increase of the business of the New York Title and Mortgage Company, its Board of Directors at the meeting held last week not only authorized the offering of additional stock so as to increase the capital and surplus of the company to $4,000,000, but also deemed it advisable to increase its staff of officers, and elected E. J. Habighorst Assistant Secretary and Edward M. Mullowney Assistant Treasurer. Both have been with the company for many years.

TRAFFIC GROWS ON NEW LINE

Growth of Bronx Borough Continues and Promises Soon to Lead All the Others.

Since the opening of the new White Plains Road rapid transit line between 180th Street and 239th Street on March 3, 1917, the traffic has increased to the point where the Public Service Commission is daily assailed by demands for the removal of the shuttle service at the northern extremity and the installation of through service. Those who have complained have pointed out that the entire section between the two points and for a long distance on each side of the route is growing rapidly in population and that there is much building activity.

Hundreds of new structures have gone up in the fifteen months since the line was opened, and hundreds of others are planned, but still the complainants say that the service is not good enough to attract investors in homes in unwanted numbers.

Inquiry of the Statistical Department of the Public Service Commission resulted in disclosing that in April, 1917, less than a month after the line was placed in operation, the traffic, despite the inconveniences of the shuttle, amounted to 265,557, and that during the same month in 1918 it was 343,885, a gain of 77,8– in a territory that is largely undeveloped. The figures of the statisticians during the twelve months from April 1, 1917, and the growth in the succeeding twelve are shown.

In December, 1917, the total traffic on the line was 338,322, and in the same month in 1918 it was 411,715; November, 1917, 323,070; 1918, 374,951; October, 1917, 333,360; 1918, 347,703; September, 1917, 310,342; 1918, 370,990. The same comparative changes continue in the traffic in the two years clear back to April, 1917.

The comparative figures for 1918 and 1919, between January and April, inclusive, show the traffic to be: January, 1918, 301,623; 1919, 412,125; February, 1918, 291,477; 1919, 381,742; March, 1918, 347,232; 1919, 447,344; April, 1918, 343,385; 1919, 457,681.

In the four months from September to December, inclusive, in 1917, the total traffic was 1,305,094, and in the same period a year later it was 1,499,607, a gain of 194,513.

In the four months inclusive from January to April in 1918 the total traffic was 1,283,717, and during the same period in 1919 it was 1,698,895, a gain of 415,178. The figures show, therefore, that the gain in the last four months' period was more than double the gain in the previous four months' period. These figures illustrate the advance in population brought about by the improved transportation, and explain the reason for the boom in building and the advance of the population northward. A representative of the Public Service Commission, commenting on the situation, said yesterday:

"There is a close fight between Queens and the Bronx for increased populations with the latter still far in the lead, but with a good prospect of greatly decreasing the lead when the Broadway subway reaches Queens which will happen some time in the near future.

"In the meantime there are large areas of practically desert land in Manhattan which are clamoring for improvement and the population that would follow any intelligent effort to develop these areas. Many square blocks on the lower west side of Manhattan are comparatively deserted; that is, they are covered with out-of-date, little old-fashioned structures which no one appears to be sufficiently interested in to do anything with.

"Considering the phenomenal rents paid by persons living in the Greenwich section and the thousands of others willing to pay similar rents in nearby sections, it is strange that there are no real estate men wide awake enough to take advantage of the situation lying right under their noses."

ENGLISH BUILDING MATERIAL

High Prices Hold Up Demand for 300,000 New Homes.

Discussing the housing situation in England and the present cost of building material, Alfred Nutting of the American Consulate General's office in London, England, says:

"Although there is an urgent need for at least 300,000 new houses in Great Britain, no start has been made in building them. Plans have been invited by the Reconstruction Ministry from local authorities in whose hands the business of erecting the required dwellings has been placed, and a large number have been submitted.

"Such local authorities have been granted power to levy a limited rate in their boroughs or districts to meet part of the expense, the remainder being found by the State. The private builder, however, without aid, finds it is impossible under present conditions to build houses of a class that formerly rented for £40 (say $200) per annum that could now profitably be let at less than £90, (say $450).

"It is estimated that no fewer than 10,000,000,000 bricks will be required, and the present turnout at Peterborough (the largest centre of the industry) does not exceed 3,500,000 weekly, with 37 out of 100 kilns in operation. Even with 100 kilns working, the annual output therefrom would amount only to some 600 millions per annum. The numerous small brickyards throughout the country have fallen into disuse during the war, owing to the cessation of building and the lack of labor, and their condition, after four years of idleness, is such that the former owners would need aid in the form of new capital to make their reopening worth while.

"The gravity of the position, from the point of view of cost, can be gauged from the following tables of pre-war and present prices of the materials:

"1. In an area in the Midlands of England, in the midst of brickyards and lime and cement works:

Building materials.	Prices. Pre-war.	Present.
3-inch bricks, delivered on site, per 1,000	$8.84	$19.01
Cement, on site, per ton	9.12	20.19
2-inch blue bricks, on site, per 1,000	10.95@12.17	31.12
Sand, on site, per load	1.48	*1.22
Timber, per cubic foot	.48@.49	1.90@2.43
Steel, fixed, per hundredweight	2.65@2.87	7.30@9.73
Lead, fixed, per hundredweight	5.85@5.94	11.68
Carting, per diem	2.19	6.70

*Plus $2.02 for carting.

"London quotations higher still—transportation a factor.

"2. In the London area prices are even higher:

Building materials.	Prices. Pre-war.	Present.
Bricks, per 1,000:
First hard stocks	$9.31	$19.47
Second hard stocks	7.54	18.25
Bath stone, per cubic foot	.39	.49
Tiles, per 1,000:
Plain red	10.22	15.22
Other	13.16	29.31
Cement, best Portland, per ton	8.76@9.97	16.56@17.26
Lime, per ton:
Red Mansfield	.87	1.15
Ancaster	.44	.60
Slates, best Welsh per 1,200	41.44	90.88
Iron, common bars, per ton	42.60	87.60
Lead, sheet, English, per ton	105.95	194.92
Wood, best deals, per standard	80.30	365.22

"Although there are reported to be 16,000,000 bricks at four yards near Peterborough, it is stated that there are no railroad cars to transport them; and the situation there, as in some other districts, is that while considerable quantities of bricks exist the lack of transport makes them unavailable in places where they are required."

American House for Norway.

An American architect, representing a company in Christiania, Norway, intends to erect a wooden house built of American material at the Norwegian-American exposition in Christiania, Norway, according to the United States Commerce Reports. This exposition is to be opened next Fall. The architect is desirous of getting in touch with American firms interested in exhibiting such articles as may be necessary for the complete outfit of this house, such as furniture for hall, smoking room, dining room, parlor, two bathrooms, four bedrooms, kitchen, and pantry. It is also his intention to exhibit laundry machinery, lighting fixtures, electrical appliances for domestic uses, pneumatic cleaners, parquet floors, &c. Another part of this exhibit will be devoted to bank fixtures, vault work, office furniture, marble work, &c. The architect will sail for Norway on July 5.

FIRST LOAN IN QUEENS.

Metropolitan Life Controller Explains Reasons for Change in Policy.

The recent loan of $500,000 made by the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company to the Queensboro Corporation is the first the Metropolitan has made for the building of walk-up apartment houses, heretofore having confined its loans to apartment and residential structures of monumental size.

Walter Stabler, controller of the company, yesterday praised the work the Queensboro Corporation, Edward A. McDougall, President, has done, and told in definite terms why the corporation should have such substantial support as the Metropolitan has given.

"We accepted the Queensboro application for a loan of $500,000," said Mr. Stabler, "because of the excellent work done by that corporation in the improvement and upbuilding of the Jackson Heights apartment house section in Queens; also because the property is within twenty-two minutes of the Grand Central station via the Queensboro tunnel service to the Twenty-fifth Street station of the Corona 'L,' and because this facility eventually is to be extended to Times Square, with additional transit upon the operation this year of the B. R. T. in Seventh Avenue, thence via Fifty-ninth Street and the new Sixtieth Street tunnel to the Union Station in the Queensboro Plaza.

"Among other reasons are the control exercised by the Queensboro Corporation over about 100 city blocks in the immediate vicinity of the new operation, its selection of an excellent class of tenants and the fact that the rentals charged are comparatively reasonable. In addition our loan represents only a reasonable percentage of the present completed, and probably can be replaced, if deemed advisable, in a larger amount when the loan market eases up a bit."

BUYING FOR OCCUPANCY MOVEMENT GAINS STRENGTH IN FINANCIAL DISTRICT

Record Price Paid for Wall Street Property—Shortage of Space to Meet Increasing Demands of Business Creates the Liveliest Realty Market Section South of Fulton Street Has Experienced in Twenty Years

The buying-for-occupancy movement in and adjacent to the financial district has just commenced to be realized and its momentum is gaining daily. Several important transactions were closed last week and several involving close to the seven figure mark are reported pending.

A highly encouraging feature of the transactions and one that shows beyond a doubt improved realty market conditions is the fact that a very large majority of them are closed on a strictly cash basis.

Many tenants are weekly finding out that others have purchased the buildings in which they are located, and these firms then are forced to buy to protect themselves. And so this movement has grown until today those offices downtown that specialize in the sale and rental of business property find that during a normally quiet period they are deluged with business, and it is with great difficulty that they are properly able to look out for the heavy demands made upon them by prospective purchasers.

Unusually high prices are being paid for realty in the financial district, but what is believed to be a record price for inside lots on Manhattan Island was paid last week by the Merchants Bank of Canada for 38 Wall Street. This property was sold for Post & Flagg by the Charles F. Noyes Company for about $500,000. The area of the property comprises 1,956 square feet, including a seven-story fairly good building, and assuming this figure to be accurate, the buyers have established a record of $255.50 per square foot, doubtless the highest ever paid for inside lots in this city for a similar area.

The property, which is presently to be abandoned for a new home on Broad Street by Post & Flagg, one of the oldest Stock Exchange houses in the city, is in the same block with the Sub-Treasury and Assay Office, and is flanked by the Gallatin National Bank and the Merchants National Bank. At its rear is the modern banking home of Redmond & Co., while directly opposite is the headquarters of J. P. Morgan & Co.

Comparison with previous prices reveals the new level for inside lots on Wall Street, and likewise shows how well it compares with the high-priced corners. Drexel & Co., the founders of the present J. P. Morgan & Co., acquired the corner of Broad and Wall Streets in the early seventies for a price which set up a record of $348 a square foot, since exceeded only by the former Silliman estate property at Wall Street and Broadway, which brought a price equal to $4 per square inch, or $576 per square foot, which still is the premier high-priced property in New York.

Through the sale of 30 Wall Street in 1901 was established a record of $180.18 per square foot, the highest for property on Wall Street east of William Street. The National City Bank bought the old Custom House on Wall Street in 1899 at a rate of $103.65, and in 1895 the property at 65 Wall Street was sold at the rate of $59.83 per square foot.

Post & Flagg recently purchased the property at 49 and 51 Broad Street from the Alliance Realty Company, Walter T. Rosen, President, for immediate improvement with a six-story building, plans for which are being prepared by George B. Post.

The sale of 38 Wall Street to the Merchants Bank of Canada makes the fourth sale to Dominion banks in the past few years. The first Canadian bank to purchase was the Bank of Montreal, which bought the eleven-story building, fifty feet front, at 64-66 Wall Street. Later, through the Noyes Company, they purchased the adjoining plot and improved it with a three-story building conforming architecturally with their main building.

It was some years after this transaction before any other Canadian bank purchased its own quarters. A few months ago the Canadian Bank of Commerce acquired the Post Building, Exchange Place, Hanover Street, and Beaver Street, an eight-story structure erected about forty years ago.

38 Wall Street Sold Last Week for Record Price.

This bank had been a tenant in this building since its completion. The property occupies the entire square bounded by the streets mentioned and William Street, except the William Street front, which is the home of the Farmers Loan and Trust Company.

The next Canadian bank to purchase was the Royal Bank of Canada, which, through Messrs. William A. White & Son, bought 68 William Street, northeast corner of Cedar Street, paying for the same over $1,600,000. The Royal Bank of Canada had for many years been an occupant of the ground floor in this building and was simply acquiring title to space which it had occupied and which came on the market as a result of the Insurance Department having taken over the company which was in control of the building.

It was the belief of real estate people generally that the purchase of the Maiden Lane block for the Federal Reserve Bank would have a tendency to enlarge the district and attract bankers further north. While it may have, it has not relieved the situation, as the increased demand for space by financial institutions and exporters very greatly exceeds the supply.

There probably is no other space on Wall Street between Broadway and William Street that can be purchased at the present time at any price.

Discussing the buying movement yesterday, Charles F. Noyes said:

"We were in a real estate boom downtown for months before the public realized it, and for the first time in my recollection we were well advanced in this upward active market before the speculators came in. It will always be a mystery to me as to how it happened that the operators simply did not or would not see the trend of downtown conditions until the movement had advanced to such a degree that it became a scramble for property on the part of the buying public.

"In the old days these operators wanted properties leased for five, ten or even twenty-one years. They favored those buildings with long-term leases and assured income, for these were the properties that they could resell, but today this condition does not exist. They are not interested in the property paying 6 per cent., or 6½ per cent., or 7 per cent.; but, as keen students of market conditions, they want properties where the leases are expiring within the year.

"Conditions have changed, and the 'buying-for-occupancy' movement is undeniably the healthiest, the strongest, and the most logical movement in downtown real estate during the last decade, and any well-located property where possession can be had is salable, and these operators will buy such properties on a close income basis, and any of the downtown real estate offices have buyers for them.

"The demand for offices, stores, lofts, and buildings is running far ahead of the available supply. I have seen property sold for $16,000 resold at $30,000; a building purchased for $42,000 resold for $90,000; another property bought at $26,000, with $1,000 cash equity, resold for $50,000; a building purchased at $115,000, and within a month the new owner spurned a cash offer of $200,000; another was bought for $160,000 by the same owner, and he declined an offer of $100,000 cash profit for his trade.

"I know of a building sold for about $3,500,000, and the new owner was unwilling to accept $1,000,000 profit. I have seen Frederick Brown buy three buildings, resell them all by contract, and have then witnessed two of the purchasers realize several times the profit that Mr. Brown secured, and one of the two offered more than the combined profits on the original sale and resale.

"Some unfair criticism has been directed toward those owners of downtown buildings where rentals were justifiably advanced during this last renting season. This criticism comes largely from these tenants who, when there was an overabundance of office space and when conditions were different, insisted very properly on following the market and secured every rent and trade advantage or concession that was possible.

"Rapidly as New York City was growing in population and commercial supremacy, more rapidly was it producing office and business quarters for its business interests up to 1914.

"Naturally, under such conditions many buildings downtown did not pay an adequate return up to 1914.

"During the twenty-year period ending in 1913 or 1914, the better locations downtown were taken over and improved, and today it is difficult to secure real first-class locations for new downtown buildings, and, quite naturally, since the demand for desirable space exceeds the supply the owners of properties are now demanding and securing a rate for their space that is going to make their buildings profitable, and justifiably so."

CHURCH TO BE RAZED.

First Reformed Episcopal Home Sold for Apartment Site.

The First Reformed Episcopal Church, at Madison Avenue and Fifty-fifth Street, built in 1876, is to be torn down. The Supreme Court has just ratified the covenant of sale. A large apartment hotel will occupy the corner.

The congregation will retain possession of the building until November. It will not abandon the neighborhood. A building in the vicinity will be leased, and the activities of the parish will be reorganized along broader lines than at present.

The sale of the First Church property will net the organization something in excess of $300,000. The principal will be left unimpaired until it has been decided just what kind of a building will best fit the needs of the parish, and what would be the most advantageous location.

The First Church is the mother church of the Reformed Episcopal communion. Its first pastor was the Right Rev. George David Cummins, formerly Assistant Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Diocese of Kentucky. He was the leader of the revolt against the High Church tendencies of the Protestant Episcopal Church.

He was succeeded in the rectorship by the Rev. William T. Sabine, D. D., afterward Bishop. The Rev. Dr. Charles Hamilton Coon, D. D., was Bishop Sabine's successor. He served only a few months and then died.

The last rector was the Rev. Dr. William Dubose Stevens, who died in France while serving as a Red Cross Chaplain.

Nassau Point Development.

Nassau Point, or Little Hog Neck, on Peconic Bay, Long Island, now being developed by Nassau Point Club Properties, Inc., is a scene of great activity these days, and many houses are now being erected there.

Some of the recent sales made were: A plot of six acres to W. J. K. Vanston, three acres to Dr. Philip Huss, ten acres to A. C. Aborn, two acres to Mrs. Jessica Lozier Payne, two acres to Dr. Curtis H. Muncie, five acres to Lawrence Bainbridge. Also plots of one or more acres to Mrs. Margaret E. Bretz, Alfred L. Seaver, James Henderson, and Dr. R. D. Grimmer of Hempstead, L. I.; H. H. Pennock of Manhattan, and John B. Slee and Robert Low Bacon.

NEW INDUSTRY FOR QUEENS.

Big Warehouse Project Launched With Visions of Ocean Shipping.

Ocean shipping via Long Island Sound is anticipated by the newly formed Queensborough Warehouse Corporation of Manhattan, which has just secured for its purposes the former property of the Astoria Cordage Works, in the Ravenswood section of Long Island City.

The property has a frontage of 300 feet on Vernon Avenue and extends back 600 feet to the East River, on which there are substantial three and four story brick buildings, which are to be fireproofed, sprinklered and converted into warehouses.

The warehouse corporation, which secured its lease through Minor L. Platt as broker, eventually intends to reimprove the entire property with a mammoth warehouse 500 by 200 feet in area, a concrete wharf 200 by 100, and to dredge the river in front of the property in order to accommodate oceangoing freight steamers.

New Home for Phi Gamma Delta.

Phi Gamma Delta Fraternity contemplates the reimprovement of the site of its present building at 32 and 34 West Forty-fourth Street with a new clubhouse to cost in the neighborhood of $300,000. Adjoining the Phi Gamma Delta is the old Yale Club at No. 30, taken over a few years ago by the Delta Kappa Epsilon Club.

TRAFFIC TUNNEL NEAR.

Work on Manhattan-Jersey Project May Begin Soon.

Construction of a traffic tunnel under the Hudson, between Manhattan and Jersey City, may begin as soon as the President signs the bill granting authority for the project.

The House last week passed the Edge bill, recently adopted by the Senate. Practically the only alteration made was a reservation to "alter, amend, or repeal" the act at any future time. Senator Edge of New Jersey, author of the bill, said this amendment was entirely satisfactory to him. Any conference will be purely perfunctory and the bill will be ready for the President's signature when he returns to Washington.

Assurance was made to the House by Representative Siegel of New York that New York and New Jersey wish to commence work as soon as possible on the great traffic artery. Already an agreement has been reached between the two States for the construction, operation, repair, and maintenance of the tunnel. The permission of the War Department for the construction also has been obtained.

New Bank Building.

S. W. Barasch, banker, at 77 Ridge Street, will build a four-story bank and office building, to cost $120,000, at 130 Delancey Street and 98 Suffolk Street, forming an "L" around the northeast corner of these thoroughfares. The contract for the improvement, which will displace two tenements, has been awarded to the Megoba Construction Company. The building, designed by B. W. Levitan, will be of brick and stone construction, covering a frontage of 23 feet on Delancey Street and 25 feet on Suffolk Street. Mr. Barasch will occupy the grade floor with his banking business. It is planned to have the building ready for occupancy by November.

Ten Stories on 18-Foot Lot.

A ten-story nonhousekeeping apartment house is to be erected on the lot, 18.6x85.8, at 4 West Ninetieth Street, near Central Park West, according to plans placed on record by G. T. E. Dieterlen, architect. M. A. Weiman is the owner of the property. The estimated cost of the improvement is $75,000.

DR. WILKINS HANGS HIMSELF IN NASSAU JAIL BATHROOM

Eludes Guard, Slips from Cell, and Makes Noose, with Smuggled Rope, Over Water Pipe.

HAD BEEN IN GOOD SPIRITS

Last Words to Guard, a Minute Before Suicide, Were a Pleasant Reference to Weather.

LEFT SEVERAL LETTERS

Officials Mystified as to How Rope Was Carried to Him—Watchers Deny Negligence.

Special to The New York Times.

MINEOLA, June 29. — Dr. Walter Keene Wilkins, the aged Long Beach physician, who on Friday was convicted of the murder of his wife on Feb. 27 last, committed suicide in the Nassau County jail here tonight.

In some way—just how is a puzzle to the county authorities—a small manila rope was smuggled into Dr. Wilkins's cell, and with this he hanged himself at 4:45 o'clock in the bathroom of the jail. His neck was broken, and he was officially pronounced dead fifteen minutes after the guards, charged with preventing just what took place, found him hanging from an iron pipe in the top of the room.

The condemned man, who was 67 years of age, when seen alive for the last time by his guards, John Willis and William Henderson, appeared to be in an unusually happy frame of mind for a person in his desperate situation. He had previously reiterated his declaration of innocence, and his last words to the guards was a reference to the weather.

"What a fine, cool night it is," he remarked.

Dr. Wilkins left three letters. One was addressed to J. P. Healy, 170 Ocean Parkway, Brooklyn, who was one of his character witnesses at the murder trial, another to a Mrs. Muller of Montilla, N. Y., and the third a short one to Sheriff Seaman.

The letter to Mr. Healy was ten pages long, and in its Dr. Wilkins reviewed the history of his case and frequently protested his entire innocence of the murder of his wife. He referred by name to the various witnesses and wrote bitterly of the testimony given by some of the State witnesses.

"I am going to be my own executioner," he wrote in the letter to Mr. Healy, "and by so doing I will save myself from being taken across the street by Carman Plant."

Plant is a Deputy Sheriff in whose custody Dr. Wilkins was to have been transferred to the death house at Sing Sing Prison next Tuesday afternoon, after Justice Manning had pronounced the sentence of death. In another part of the letter the dead man wrote that another reason he had for taking his life was his consideration for Justice Manning.

"I want to save Justice Manning," he wrote, "from having to look me in the eye next Tuesday and having to say that I have had a fair trial."

I am absolutely innocent of the crime which the indictment charges me with," he wrote near the close of the letter.

The letter to Mr. Healy was intended for the newspapers, but Coroner Jones refused to give it to reporters tonight. He said that the dead man spoke very bitterly of some of those concerned in his prosecution. Dr. Wilkins also charged in that letter, said the Coroner, that he was the victim of a "frame up."

In the letter to Mrs. Muller Dr. Wilkins asked her to care for his dogs and his cat. He left full instructions for the feeding and care of the animals. In the letter to Sheriff Seaman he inclosed $50 and asked the Sheriff to see to it that his body was cremated.

Immediately following the suicide District Attorney Charles R. Weeks, who had charge of the prosecution of Dr. Wilkins, ordered a searching investigation in an effort to find out how, and by whom, the rope with which Dr. Wilkins hanged himself was smuggled into the cell. Dr. Wilkins was searched on Friday and everything that he had with which he might have harmed himself was taken away. Even a lead pencil which was found in Dr. Wilkins's pocket was removed and at the time it was stated that the guards at the jail had been doubled "as a precaution against the doctor harming himself."

Henderson and Mills and the other guards who relieved them at regular intervals had instructions to walk past the doctor's cell and see that everything was all right every ten minutes. They also were ordered to be alert to see that nothing with which the prisoner might attempt to end his life was smuggled to him by visitors.

Rope a Mystery.

Both Henderson and Willis said tonight that they had carried out their instructions to the letter and that they were unable to account for the presence of the Manila rope. That the rope was smuggled in they are both certain, but how and by whom is a question that neither is able to answer. The rope was of quarter-inch gauge and was new. It was about six feet long and, wrapped up, would make a package of considerable size and one difficult to conceal. Dr. Wilkins had no visitors today, but he did have several yesterday, and the German Trusts Send Envoys to Russia to Renew Trade

BASLE, June 29.—Negotiations have been opened between Germany and Russia with a view to re-establishing economic relations between the Berlin and Moscow Governments, according to an Elberfeld dispatch, printed in the Tageblatt of Berlin.

The dispatch says that representatives of great German trusts have left for Russia to investigate conditions and fix a basis for future exchange of merchandise.

ALL RESUME TRADE WITH FOES AGAIN

United States on Par with Other Allies When German Blockade Is Lifted.

SENATE ACTION CAN WAIT

Fall Resolution Is Made Virtually Unnecessary by the Council's Action.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, June 29.—The blockade of Germany will be lifted on receipt of information by the Superior Blockade Council of the Allies that the treaty of peace has been ratified by Germany.

This modification of the treaty means that resumption of trade by the United States with the late enemy power will not have to wait upon ratification of the treaty by the Senate. It renders the Fall resolution, introduced last Monday, useless as far as its main purpose was concerned.

Announcement of this change in the situation was made tonight by Acting Secretary of State Phillips, who gave out this cablegram from Paris received by the State Department:

"At a meeting Thursday, June 26, the Council of the principal allied and associated powers adopted the following resolutions in regard to the raising of the blockade on Germany:

"The Superior Blockade Council is instructed to base its arrangements for rescinding restrictions upon trade with Germany on the assumption that the allied and associated powers will not wait to raise the blockade until the completion of the ratification as provided for at the end of the treaty of peace with Germany, but that it is to be raised immediately on the receipt of the information that the treaty of peace has been ratified by Germany."

While the final text of the Peace Treaty as signed at Versailles yesterday is still officially withheld, the provision in Article 440 of the draft printed in the Congressional Record and in THE NEW YORK TIMES, in the form in which it was originally presented to the Germans, had this to say as to when the treaty was to become effective:

"The deposit of ratifications shall be made at Paris as soon as possible. Powers of which the seat of Government is outside of Europe will be entitled merely to inform the Government of the French Republic through their diplomatic representative at Paris that their ratification has been given; in that case they must transmit the instrument of ratification as soon as possible. A first procès-verbal of the deposit of the ratification will be drawn up as soon as the treaty has been ratified by Germany on the one hand and by three of the principal allied and associated powers on the other hand.

"From the date of this first procès-verbal the treaty will come into force between the high contracting parties who have ratified it. For the determination of all periods of time provided for in the present treaty this date will be the date of the coming into force of the treaty. In all other respects the treaty will enter into force for each power at the date of the deposit of its ratification."

Under this provision the treaty would have gone into effect as between Germany and some of the allied powers before becoming effective in the case of the United States, for instance, where delay in ratification was inevitable.

It was to meet just such a situation that Senators Fall and Edge introduced their resolutions last Monday designed to bring about formal recognition by the American Government of a return of the status of peace with the signing of the treaty, instead of waiting for ratification by the Senate in order to resume trade relations.

The resolution adopted by the Big Four is regarded as another victory for President Wilson, who was fully aware of the stir that had been created.

PARIS, June 29.—(Associated Press.)—Conditioning the raising of the blockade upon Germany's ratification of the treaty is regarded in conference circles as a sure plan for securing a speedy ratification because of Germany's food and raw material needs.

As Russia was practically blockaded as a result of the blockade against the Central Powers, the opinion is held that when the blockade against them ceases, there will lie no blockade against Russia. However, Soviet Russia's lack of credit and inability to make financial arrangements is looked upon by financial advisers connected with the conference as a bar to Russia's resumption of trade on a large scale.

FRATERNIZING BAN LIFTED.

Americans Now Dare Announce Engagements to German Girls.

Copyright, 1919, by The Chicago Tribune Co.

COBLENZ, June 28.—The Army of Occupation can now fraternize. The rule against it was declared a dead letter today by Colonel Dodge, Provost Marshal, as it applied only during the state of war.

Twenty officers and soldiers who were secretly engaged to German girls can now make the engagements public.

WAR PROHIBITION REPEAL HANGS ON ATTORNEY GENERAL

He Must Decide for President Date When Demobilization Is Complete.

ARMY UNABLE TO FIX TIME

900,000 Soldiers Still to be Discharged, of Whom 450,000 Are in Europe.

CONGRESS STICKS TO PLANS

No Action Until After Recess—"Wets" to Offer Amendments to Volstead Bill Then.

WASHINGTON, June 29.—The Attorney General and not the War Department will have to advise President Wilson when demobilization has been completed, military experts said today when their opinion was sought as to the approximate date of rescinding wartime prohibition. The present composition of the military establishment is so complicated, it was said, that a decision by the highest legal authority would be necessary.

The army is estimated today to number a few thousand more than one million men, composed of regulars, National Guardsmen in Federal service, drafted men and volunteer recruits who recently enlisted for the one and three year periods. The regulars, exclusive of "duration of emergency" men, include not more than 40,000 men at the most, and the recently recruited class totals 61,000, leaving 900,000 as the number which apparently must be discharged before demobilization can be said to have been completed and the President legally entitled to act.

450,000 Still Abroad.

The period required for demobilization depends, it was said today, within definite limits upon the size of the American force left with the Army of Occupation. The 450,000 men now comprising the A. E. F. in France and Germany could be returned by Aug. 10, and the camp machinery in this country is capable of discharging the men as fast as the transports can land them.

The Siberian expedition does not affect demobilization plans, since the intention is to replace this force entirely with voluntary recruits, who have either specifically requested Siberian service or who have not asked any definite assignment and may therefore be sent wherever the department decides.

Army officers expected today to hear soon that the 4th and 5th Divisions of regulars had been again released by General Pershing for return. In fact, recent communications from A. E. F. headquarters list the various units of these divisions as "released," but the possibility that this notation might be an oversight is admitted.

With the exception of the First and Fifth Divisions, inclusive, the only line organizations still abroad are the 310th Engineers, the 106th and 314th Train Headquarters, the 114th Sanitary Squad and parts of the 310th Supply and Ammunition Trains. The remainder of the troops abroad, about 200,000 in all, comprise motor companies, sales units and similar service of supply organizations.

No Change in House Plan.

While President Wilson's announcement last night that he would not lift the ban on wartime prohibition until the army was demobilized provoked a storm of varying comment in Congressional circles, there were no indications tonight of any concerted move to obtain immediate consideration by the House of enforcement legislation.

Indeed, the general view was that there was law enough for the present and that the House would adhere to the plan outlined by leaders to let the whole prohibition question go over until after the holiday recess, which may begin tomorrow night or Tuesday. Members opposed to the drastic provisions of the measure reported out by the Judiciary Committee gave notice today that they would endeavor to have these stricken out on the floor. From the other side came intimations that in some respects the bill was not strict enough, and it was said an amendment would be offered to eliminate the section which would permit a citizen to store liquor in his own home and the other clause which would make its "use" lawful.

The President made it clear in his statement that with the failure of Congress to act on his suggestion for repeal of the wartime law so far as it related to wines and beer, the effect of his proclamation to be issued upon the completion of demobilization would be to permit the sale of whisky until the country becomes "dry" by constitutional amendment on Jan. 16, 1920.

Predicts Whiskey Orgy.

This means, according to Representative Randall, Prohibitionist, California, that the country will be thrown into "a whiskey drinking orgy," which, he says, the President surely does not desire. To bridge the gap between the date of the proclamation and the effective date of constitutional prohibition, Mr. Randall announced tonight that he would introduce tomorrow an emergency measure to prohibit the removal from bond, or transportation in interstate commerce, of any distilled spirits for beverage purposes.

Mr. Randall estimated that at the earliest the army would not be de-

CHANCELLOR WRITES ALLIES

Says He Is Responsible for Emperor's Acts While in Office.

REFERS TO CONSTITUTION

Former Adviser to Kaiser Inaugurated Germany's Ruthless Warfare on Land and Sea.

DEFENDED BELGIAN OUTRAGE

Won Notoriety for 'Scrap of Paper' Incident, and for 'Necessity Knows No Law.'

BERLIN, June 28, (Associated Press.)—Dr. Theobald von Bethmann Hollweg, former German Chancellor, has formally asked the allied and associated powers to place him on trial instead of the former Emperor. The former Chancellor says that he assumes responsibility for the acts of Germany during his period of office and places himself at the disposal of the Allies.

The request of the former Chancellor was made on June 25 in a communication to Premier Clemenceau, President of the Conference. Dr. von Bethmann Hollweg, it is said, desired to take this step on May 26, but refrained at that time on the expressed wish of the German Government. The communication asks Premier Clemenceau to bring the following document to the knowledge of the allied and associated powers:

"In Article 227 of the peace terms, the allied and associated powers publicly arraign his Majesty, William II. of Hohenzollern, former German Emperor, for a supreme offense against international morality and the sanctity of treaties. At the same time they announced their resolve to address a request to the Government of the Netherlands for the surrender of the former Emperor for purpose of trial.

"With reference thereto, I take the liberty of addressing a request to the powers to let the projected proceedings against his Majesty, the Emperor, be taken against me. For this object I hereby place myself at the disposal of the allied and associated powers.

"As former German Imperial Chancellor, I bear for my period of office sole responsibility, as regulated in the German Constitution, for the political acts of the Emperor. I believe I may deduce therefrom the claim that the reckoning which the allied and associated powers desire to demand for these acts shall be demanded solely of me.

"Being convinced that the allied and associated powers will not deny international respect to the legal position fixed by public constitutional law, I may express the hope that they will be inclined to yield to my urgent request.

"VON BETHMANN HOLLWEG.

"Hohenfinow, June 25."

An official statement denying that the former German Crown Prince is in Germany was made public through the Wolff Bureau this morning.

Theobald von Bethmann Hollweg, Chancellor from 1909 to 1917, will probably be known for all time for his share in two events at the beginning of the war. The first when he maintained before the Reichstag on Aug. 4, 1914, that "necessity knows no law" in defending the attack on Belgium's neutrality, and the second in his frank admission to Sir Edward Goschen, Great Britain's Ambassador in Germany, that the treaty guaranteeing the neutrality of Belgium was nothing but a "scrap of paper."

Early this year Bethmann Hollweg offered to go before a tribunal to give an account of his stewardship, and it was announced in Berlin on March 27 that he would be among those tried by the German court which was investigating the responsibility for the war. In connection with others, the name of Bethmann Hollweg has been mentioned a number of times as one who would be tried by the Allies for offenses in connection with the origin of the war.

In all the years of his Chancellorship Bethmann Hollweg gladly assumed responsibility for Emperor William's actions, and defended to the last the man who was his schoolmate at Bonn. As far back as the year that he assumed office, the Kaiser in a speech reminding his subjects that he ruled by "divine right" caused a political storm which Chancellor Bethmann Hollweg rode, affirming in public that the Prussian state did not know the sovereignty of the people and that the Kings in relation to

Turks Are Told to Quit Paris, as Agreement Is Impossible

PARIS, June 29.—A note will be sent the Turkish delegation today by the Council of Four advising the members to return to Constantinople.

The message will say that there is no reason to believe any agreement can be reached in the near future because of the great difference between the demands of the Turks and the concessions the Allies are willing to grant.

The Council of Four at a meeting Saturday reached an agreement on the economic terms to be imposed on Austria.

The note makes it clear that there is no intention to act until further reports are available from the commission studying the Turkish situation.

BERLIN PAPERS GO INTO MOURNING

Appear in Black Borders and Make Moan in Despairing Editorials.

SOME PREACH REVENGE

But a Few Counsel Work for Rehabilitation—Churches to Mourn Next Sunday.

BERLIN, June 29, (Associated Press.)—Some of the Berlin papers, announcing the signing of the treaty, appear in black borders, with captions on their Versailles articles such as "Germany's Fate Sealed," "Peace and Annihilation."

The Tageszeitung, in closing an editorial, says:

"Clemenceau, Lloyd George and Wilson and their accessories have sown dragon's teeth of eternal enmity."

The whole German press writes in the strain of melancholy pessimism. The Täglische Rundschau says:

"What we need is a despot to compel the nation to work. If we are unable to install him, our enemies will send him."

Dr. Dernburg, in the Tageblatt, says:

"The cup is drained to the dregs. There is no sense in continuing the controversy. It is better to endeavor quickly to find our feet. The concessions made to us are not without value, and open the way to certain alleviations."

The Freiheit, Lokal-Anzeiger and Vorwärts all protest against the idea of revenge. General Count Max Montgelas, writing in the Tageblatt, says:

"There is no choice but to observe the treaty to the extreme limit of what is possible. Absolute candor and sincerity must form the lodestar of Germany's foreign policy."

The Pan German Deutsche Zeitung has been suppressed for printing yesterday a headline: "Revenge for the Dishonor of 1919."

"It is recalled by some papers that yesterday was the anniversary of the assassination of Francis Ferdinand at Sarajevo.

The Evangelical churches of Germany will celebrate Sunday, July 6, as a day of mourning. It will be requested that quiet prevail and that Germany make an earnest effort to recuperate by consistent work. The church bells will chime a hymn of mourning.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, June 28, (via Copenhagen.)—Though all the newspapers carry on the first page in the largest type the headline "The Day of Signing," they offer very little comment on this most important event.

Theodore Wolff in the Tageblatt prophesies in his usual dramatic style that the Versailles treaty is bound to prove a mere scrap of paper, while other writers call it the most portentous document ever written that will sooner or later bring disaster to all the nations who signed.

Count von Reventlow, in the Deutsche Tageszeitung, says President Wilson was right when, in one of his last speeches, he said; "We expose Germany to the contempt of the whole world." He goes on: "Wilson might have saved Germany from signing the so-called honor clauses, but against better knowledge he very opportunely emphasized Germany's culpability and immorality in order to save his own face. People have long since become aware that nothing is left of his Fourteen Points."

The Lokal Anzeiger comments:

"When this paper reaches our readers the thing will be done in the Mirror Gallery at Versailles by which the Entente, with brutal force, will have heaped insult upon injury. The German delegates will have signed the so-called Peace Treaty. To imagine such a thing and remain calm is extremely difficult. Our emotions seem irrepressible, but we must learn to keep them within bounds.

"We do not need to crush them out. Oh, no; but to shout our feelings to the Crown Prince Was Ready for Flight Friday With Several Vessels Lying Off Dutch Island

THE HAGUE, June 27.—The ex-Crown Prince was still on the Island of Wieringen today, eagerly awaiting the final signature of peace. It is the understanding here that after this no time would be lost on the island. Preparations for his flight have been in readiness since Monday.

The ex-Crown Prince intended to leave by a boat in the middle of the night, if the news was received then. Several vessels lying out at sea in the vicinity of the island were plainly visible to THE NEW YORK TIMES correspondent on Tuesday. Since then these vessels have increased in number. The seashore is hardly five minutes' walk from the ex-Prince's house, and the vessels could easily be reached in a motorboat. An airplane could also land on this part of the island without attracting attention.

The inhabitants have all been led to believe that the ex-Prince will remain there at least three months. Major von Muellren, the ex-Prince's aid, denied that there were special telegraphic facilities on the island when THE TIMES correspondent referred to them, and appeared to be angry at the question, but it was certain that the ex-Prince would be one of the first to learn of the peace signature.

Unusual precautions in the case of visitors desiring to land on the island have been taken, and they are closely questioned regarding their nationality and the purpose of their visit. A special messenger from the former Crown Princess has arrived on the island.

HAIL LLOYD GEORGE AS HERO IN LONDON

King Pays to Premier Honor Heretofore Given Only to Persons of Royal Blood.

THOUSANDS ACCLAIM HIM

Crowds Make His Return from Paris a Procession of Triumph and Rejoicing.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, June 30.—With honors unprecedented, Premier Lloyd George returned home from the Peace Conference last night. Immense crowds were awaiting him at the Victoria Station and at Downing Street. That was expected. It was the King who gave the touch that made the welcome so memorable.

It had been announced that the Premier's colleagues would greet him at the station, and no one was surprised to see Lord Milner, Lord Curzon, Lord Reading, and other notables on hand. It was natural, too, that Mrs. Lloyd George should be there. But the arrival of the King and the Prince of Wales put an unlooked for climax to the occasion, and the Prime Minister was welcomed with honors until now reserved for royalties and for only the most distinguished of soldiers. The King's act put unmistakably the seal of national approval on victories the Premier had won in the diplomatic field.

The King was not content with a mere welcome at the station. He insisted that Lloyd George drive to Buckingham Palace to receive the congratulations of the Queen. And so, through cheering thousands, wildly acclaiming the man who had brought back peace, the King and his Premier drove together.

Meanwhile, another great throng had been waiting patiently at the Prime Minister's official residence in Downing Street. It was a remarkable gathering, for it included many, both men and women, who ordinarily would not turn out on Sunday afternoon for mere sightseeing. There were smartly setup elderly men and many well dressed women, and their willingness to wait for hours on the chance of a momentary glimpse of the Premier showed how strong is his hold on the people.

Crowd at Downing Street.

Downing Street is a narrow cul de sac, running out of Whitehall, and it was packed from end to end with spectators. Out in Whitehall were several thousand more, so that when Lloyd George came he passed through solid walls of cheering, waving, enthusiastic Britons. He rode with his wife in the royal carriage, such as was used by President Wilson on his visit to London. It was an open landau with coachman and footman in scarlet liveries. Mounted policemen rode before and after the carriage, but as soon as the Premier had entered his house the police let the crowd press forward.

A few minutes later Lloyd George appeared in the window above his front door. It was a curious scene. England houses her leading statesman in as dingy and unimpressive a building as there is in all London, and from its mean, small window he had to make a historic speech. His wife sat by him, and he seemed, despite his incessant labors and recent indisposition, in the best of health and spirits.

He spoke slowly and impressively. Another great British statesman, on just

SIMPLE CEREMONY AS WILSON SAILS

French Admirals and American Naval and Military Officers in Attendance.

OVATION ON LEAVING PARIS

Enthusiastic Tribute from Lloyd George—Homeward Voyage Starts in Perfect Weather.

BY CHARLES H. GRASTY.

By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

ON BOARD U. S. S. OKLAHOMA (Escorting Warship.), via U. S. S. George Washington, June 29.—The President sailed from Brest in most beautiful weather, and there is promise of more of the same sort. Mr. and Mrs. Wilson show no ill effects from the strenuous activities of the past few days, and while both have formed a sincere attachment for France, they are glad to turn their faces homeward. Contrary to some reports current in America, Mr. Wilson is in excellent health.

While the element of novelty which entred into his reception on his arrival last December has disappeared, there was deeper feeling, manifested toward him last night in Paris than ever before. The thousands of "Vive, Wilsons!" came from the French heart, and the continuous ovation in Paris showed the popular recognition of the leadership of America in obtaining peace.

One very old Frenchman sprang in front of the President's car in the Champs Elysées and shouted in English: "Mr. Wilson, thank you for peace!"

That was the keynote, and the same sentiment was echoed in a thousand ways. Although, owing to the different American point of view, Mr. Wilson has been frequently antagonized during these months, at the end of the peace negotiations his relations with the heads of other Governments are most cordial.

Premier Lloyd George came over to the Place des Etats-Unis last night and told the President: "You have done more to bring the English-speaking peoples together than was ever before done by any man."

Premier Clemenceau looked as if he were losing his best friend when he said goodbye in the Invalides Station.

Many representatives of the smaller nations have expressed to me, within the past few days, the hope that the President would be able to return to Europe and continue his work of reconciliation and reconstruction, which they said nobody else was in a position to do, or able to do so well.

Congratulatory Messages to Wilson.

ON BOARD THE U. S. S. GEORGE WASHINGTON, June 29.—(By Wireless to the Associated Press.)—President Wilson received today a series of notable despatches as he departed from France. These came from King George, King Alfonso and the Emperor of Japan, and congratulated the President on the large part he took during the war, and in the Peace Conference.

It was a majestic naval spectacle that President Wilson saw as he stood on the bridge of the steamer watching the receding shores of Europe and waving farewell as the French shore batteries boomed a parting salute. The battleship Oklahoma led the way, with American and French destroyers flanking the presidential ship on either side.

At about 5 o'clock the French escort was ordered back and the destroyers

DRASTIC GERMAN BUDGET

Government Plans Severe Taxation to Pay the War Bills.

IS VIRTUAL CONFISCATION

Emergency Measures Propose to Raise 70,000,000,000 to 90,000,000,000 Marks.

HIGH TARIFFS ARE LIKELY

Heavy Increases Likely on Tobacco, Sugar, Inheritances, and All War Profits.

BERLIN, June 28, (Associated Press.)—The new budget is the subject of long conferences and discussions between Government leaders. It is expected that the program will be ready for the National Assembly early next month.

As originally planned, the budget was to make "confiscations" to the amount of from 40,000,000,000 to 50,000,000,000 marks. As more money is needed, however, the conferees decided to extend the "confiscation" list to bring in between 70,000,000,000 and 90,000,000,000 marks. Payments will be made as easy as possible, but those who do not pay promptly will be taxed.

[At the old rate of exchange this would be more than $20,000,000,000.]

Since Dr. Schiffer, former Minister of Finance, promulgated his original plan, the Peace Treaty has been framed, necessitating the raising of 12,000,000,000 marks more than originally estimated, so that a basic revision is necessary.

Three of the bills to be submitted do not have a permanent money raising character and are emergency measures only.

The tax on war profits falls into two classes and hits individuals and corporations. Excess profits over peace earnings would be taxed, in the case of individuals, on everything over 3,000 marks up to 10,000 marks at 5 per cent. Above 10,000 marks the rate would increase proportionately as the profits increase until it reaches 50 per cent. Excess profits earned by corporations in 1919 will be taxed up to 80 per cent., instead of 60, as in 1918.

A "war surrender of excess income" would be resorted to in the work of collecting from individuals all income increases above 5,000 marks in 1919. No decision has been reached as to where actual "confiscation" begins, the Government maintaining that all above 240,500 marks shall be taken. The Finapcial Commission is holding out for 440,500.

Losses since Dec. 31 shall be calculated and taken into consideration in adjusting the amount of tax to be paid.

Heavy Inheritance Taxes.

The inheritance tax would be more drastic than ever, and heirs would be doubly handicapped because the Government would first tax the property of all decedents and then levy another tax when the property passes to the heir. This tax would be more severe in proportion to the relationship of the heir to the deceased. Property and money gifts made during the lifetime of the donor would be taxed heavily. The financial status of the heirs would also determine the rate of taxation. Thus a large inheritance received by a wealthy person would pay as high as 80 per cent. to the State.

The taxes of individual German States would be unified, and real estate near fortresses, which would become more valuable when the strongholds are dismantled, would help to pay the empire's financial expenses. Tobacco and sugar-taxes would be increased, and those on matches and wax papers would be doubled.

A high protective duty would be imposed on imports to protect home industries, and all amusements, celebrations and instructive and educational gatherings would be taxed on the number of tickets issued to patrons, or on the sums received from the sale of foods or drinks, if the performance is free. Playing cards would yield 50 cents per deck.

The Government estimates that the increase in taxes over last year from various sources will be as follows: Tobacco, 400,000,000 marks; inheritances, 470,000,000; sugar, 180,000,000; recreations, 300,000,000; matches, &c., 28,000,000 real estate, 74,000,000, and playing cards, 8,000,000. The income tax for 1919 is expected to bring an increase of 1,200,000,000 marks, and property confiscations will bring an estimated sum of 10,000,000,000.

Bavaria will have a floating debt of 800,000,000 marks at the end of this year, Finance Minister Speck declared in an address at Bamberg. Up to this time, he said, taxes had returned only 115,000,000 marks annually, and new tax sources must be found. School expenditures are estimated at 27,000,000 marks and there is no money in sight to meet them, while the expenditures for State employes will aggregate 179,000,000 marks.

ERZBERGER RESIDENCE FIRED AT BY MOB

He Flees Secretly from Weimar to Berlin—May Go to Switzerland.

Copyright, 1919, by The Chicago Tribune Co.

BERLIN, June 28, (Delayed.)—Several rifle shots, some of which broke a few windows, were fired last night at the residence of Mathias Erzberger, who accepted Marshal Foch's armistice terms and whom the opposition now is damning for acceptance of the Versailles treaty.

The night following the adjournment of the National Assembly at Weimar, the mob waited for Erzberger and threatened to hang him. He fled secretly, and today for the first time disclosed himself in Berlin.

Other threats are made against him and Erzberger is reported to be thoroughly frightened.

BERLIN, June 28, (Associated Press.) —Mathias Erzberger, Vice Premier and Minister of Finance, the Tageszeitung says, shortly will take a holiday in Switzerland. The reason for this journey, the paper adds, "probably will be found in Erzberger's well known modesty which is impelling him to escape the ovations which are being showered on him at present from all sides."

Since his somewhat sensational flight from Weimar earlier in the week, Herr Erzberger has been little in evidence in Berlin. It is said that this stormy petrol of German politics in his new post as Finance Minister is engaged in perfecting drastic measures of financial reform of which an impost on private fortunes is the leading feature. In spite of the ominous rumblings which followed the political panic in Weimar Monday, Herr Erzberger apparently still has the Centrists solidly behind him and, it is said in political circles, his influence in the Cabinet is unimpaired.

The fact that two or three leading Centrists resigned from the party is dismissed as insignificant if taken as an indication of the party's alleged impatience with its chief. Political onlookers assert that the real test will come "if the party attempts to resign from Erzberger."

world, which for a period was a political duty, is no longer opportune. Now we must learn to keep silent. Our faith will speak for us, and if God wills, some day our deeds will. Our time is still distant, but it is our duty to prepare ourselves and our children morally. Therefore let us watch the Versailles proceedings with a brave eye.

their people are Kings in their own right.

Early this year Bethmann-Hollweg, in an article published in the Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung, said: "I long for the day when I can contribute to the victory of truth before an impartial court of justice, which ought certainly to have all the material from both sides at its disposal."

In two volumes of memoirs written since the armistice, the former Chancellor blamed the German Army for starting the war. In the memoirs he repeated his frequent assertions concerning the alleged plan of France and England to encircle Germany. He said he was very much astonished at the severity of the Austrian ultimatum to Serbia, knowing of it in advance only in a general way.

In his memoirs Bethmann Hollweg said he would refuse to accept a tribunal composed of the enemies of Germany, and in his view the tribunal should consist of neutrals.

Captain von Beerfelde, who was prosecuted for spreading the Lichnowsky memoirs in Germany, petitioned the Reichstag to place on trial those responsible for the war and demanded the arrest of Bethmann Hollweg.

The Kaiser was reported last November, soon after his flight to Holland, as placing the blame for the beginning of the war on the shoulders of Bethmann Hollweg and von Jagow, former Minister of Foreign Affairs. A statement to this effect was published in the Cologne Gazette from the pen of Georg Wegener, recounting a conversation he had with the Kaiser before the latter fled.

"Against my will they sent me to Norway," the former Emperor was quoted as saying. "But the Chancellor said to me," declared the ex-Kaiser, "'Your Majesty must take this voyage in order to maintain peace. If your Majesty remains here it undoubtedly means war, and the world will lay to our charge the responsibility for this war.'"

After this interview appeared, the German newspapers published a statement from Bethmann Hollweg in which he energetically protested against the Emperor's statement. He denied that the object of the Emperor's cruise in Norwegian waters was the one as stated by his former master.

When his "scrap of paper" speech raised a furore that was heard around the world, Bethmann Hollweg sought to mitigate his remark by an explanation in which he endeavored to show that his expression was misinterpreted. He said that he told Sir Edward Goschen that Britain would never have entered the war just for Belgian neutrality, but that she entered it when her own interests demanded it.

"That is what I meant," he said, "when I told Sir Edward Goschen in that last interview, when we sat down to talk the matter over privately as man to man, that among the reasons which had impelled England to go to war the Belgian neutrality treaty had for her only the value of a scrap of paper."

In a statement to the Reichstag he favored the campaign of ruthlessness by sea and air and land, and said that any German statesman who opposed the most extreme measures in the war against England ought to be hanged.

Bethmann Hollweg has been described as a man who was a consummate master in playing both ends against the middle. In the early stages of his career he was known as a liberal and a moderate, but in later life he became outspoken against liberalism and democracy. His tactics always appeared to be to take a middle course and to side with neither the conservatives nor the liberals in any of the great disputes. He was wont to put forth ambiguous utterances so that neither side knew which side he was on, yet that both suspected he leaned more strongly toward their side.

Of Jewish descent, Bethmann Hollweg was an aristocrat and an intimate of royalty. He was a member of the Borussia Corps with the Kaiser at Bonn University. After leaving college he studied law and became an assistant judge. By the time he was 30 years old he was a district judge and later became provincial president of Potsdam, where he became a frequent companion of the Emperor, and then his rise was rapid until he succeeded von Bülow as Chancellor.

In later years he talked of himself as a "soldier of autocracy," and became the leader of reaction in Germany. In July, 1917, he made an address to a committee of the Reichstag, in which he spurned the idea of peace without annexations or indemnities, and predicted victory for Germany.

During his term as Home Secretary he made a speech in 1908, said to have been inspired by the Kaiser, in which he declared that, though Germany was then happily free of all immediate anxiety so far as her foreign relations were concerned, her present and future position as a great power must rest ultimately on her strong arm, and though the strength of her arm was greater than it ever had been, it must grow yet stronger.

Bethmann Hollweg is 62 years old. During the war he held the rank of Lieutenant General in the army. Since his retirement from office he has been living at Hohenfinow, on his estate near Eberswalde, twenty-seven miles north of Berlin.

DECLARES THE ALLIES WON'T ASK FOR KAISER

Dutch Newspaper Hears Holland, as Member of League, Will Order Him to Surrender.

AMSTERDAM, June 29.—The allied and associated powers will not ask for the extradition of the former Emperor, the Paris correspondent of the Telegraaf says he learns, but will ask the Dutch Government in the name of the League of Nations to see that Herr Hohenzollern does not escape the moral consequences.

It is expected that, as a member of the League, he adds, Holland will inform the former Emperor that he must appear before an international court or leave the country. A highly placed French authority on international law told the correspondent that the proceedings against the former Emperor would be on moral grounds, and the sentence would be of a moral character entirely. There is no question of a death sentence or imprisonment, the correspondent was told.

It is probable, the correspondent continues, that the crimes of the former Emperor against international morality in starting the war and in violating Belgian neutrality will be condemned severely; the Hohenzollerns will be declared forever deposed, and it will be made impossible for the former Emperor to do further harm by assigning him a place of residence, from which he must not move.

POLK GOING TO PARIS, LANSING TO RETURN

Change to be Made in July, Under Secretary Becoming Head of Delegation.

DELEGATES ARE WORN OUT

Many Seek Relaxation from Strain —Supreme Council Likely to be Reconstituted.

PARIS, June 29, (Associated Press.)—With the departure of President Wilson, Secretary Lansing becomes head of the American peace delegation which will carry on negotiations on the other treaties. But this arrangement will probably be only temporary, as Secretary Lansing expects to return to the United States about the middle of July. Frank Polk, Assistant Secretary of State, will take his place.

Henry White will start for a week's vacation at the seashore tomorrow, and Colonel House is going to London. So General Bliss and Secretary Lansing will be the only American delegates in Paris for a few days.

All the delegates are so worn out by the protracted negotiations that many of them are taking leaves, and it will probably be difficult to make much headway for the next fortnight.

The Council of the Peace Conference, it is understood, will again take the form of an Interallied Supreme Council, in which each of the great powers will be represented by two delegates.

According to the Temps, the council will be formed as follows: Premier Clemenceau and Foreign Minister Pichon for France, Secretary Lansing and Colonel Edward M. House for the United States, Foreign Minister Balfour and Viscount Milner or Andrew Bonar Law for Great Britain, Foreign Minister Tittoni and Guglielmo Marconi for Italy, and Baron Makino and Viscount Chinda for Japan.

The Peace Treaty was brought from Versailles to Paris last night and deposted at the Protocol Office. Marshal Joffre, who returned to Paris from London last evening, was unable to attend the ceremony at Versailles, and Marshal Foch and Marshal Pétain, both of whom were detained at their headquarters were also unable to be present.

Foreign Minister Tittoni and the other members of the new Italian delegation to the Peace Conference arrived today.

The departure of Dr. Hermann Müller and Dr. Bell and about fifty other members of the German delegation from Versailles last night was virtually unnoticed. To avoid the crowds celebrating the signing of the treaty in the streets of Versailles the Germans were sent in fifteen automobiles by a roundabout route to Noisy-le-Roi, where they boarded their train at 9 o'clock. In the party was Herr Scheurmann, who represented the Deutsche Tageszeitung at Versailles and who was temporarily arrested by the French last week.

The Germans were accompanied as far as Cologne by French and Italian officers. The Germans took their leave of the French officials at Versailles with punctilious politeness.

Dr. Haniel von Haimhausen, who became the leader of the German mission after the departure of Dr. Müller and Dr. Bell, will leave Versailles Monday morning with about thirty secretaries and other minor attachés. About twenty secretaries and stenographers will be left behind in charge of Baron von Lersner.

Following the departure of Bernard M. Baruch, Vance McCormick and Thomas W. Lamont, John Foster Dulles has been named as the leading expert adviser to the delegation which is now considering the economic problems connected with the Austrian treaty.

BERLIN, June 28, (Associated Press.) —Dr. Hermann Müller, the Foreign Minister, begged to be excused from an interview with the correspondent of the Tageblatt on his arrival at Versailles because he did not desire to detract from the nature of the mission assigned him. The Minister told the correspondent he was fulfilling his task with a heavy heart.

The German newspaper correspondents who were admitted to the ceremony in the Hall of Mirrors voted to send a uniform report to the German press and to record the happenings in plain language on the ground that, "because this is a day of mourning in German history, journalistic pyrotechnics are not suitable." A committee of three was selected to edit the uniform report.

KING GEORGE TO POINCARE.

He Promises Co-operation in the Work of Reconstruction.

PARIS, June 29.—King George has sent to President Poincaré a 300-word telegram of congratulation on the signing of the Peace Treaty.

"On this happy day," the King said, "when our enemy has at last admitted defeat, I beg you to accept warmest congratulations and best wishes."

The King recalled the struggles through which the French and British soldiers had gone side by side and promised hearty co-operation in the work of reconstruction. The message ended:

"Great Britain offers sincerest thanks to France and wishes her the fullest success."

BERLIN THREATENS POLES.

Will Take Measures if Internment of Germans Doesn't Stop.

LONDON, June 30.—The German Armistice Commission has sent a note to General Dupont, Chief of the French Army Headquarters Staff at the Ministry of War, calling attention to the fact that the Poles are interning all Germans over 17 years of age, including women, at camps established for the purpose at Brest-Litovsk, Kovel, and Novogeorgievsk, says a Berlin dispatch to the Wireless Press.

The Prussian Government has sent a wireless message to the Polish authorities, stating that in order to protect German citizens against further violence it will be compelled to take such measures as will hit hard the Polish population of Prussian territory unless a satisfactory reply is received within three days.

Peace Celebration in Rio Janeiro.

RIO JANEIRO, June 28.—News that the treaty of peace had been signed was received here today with general rejoicing. Buildings throughout the city displayed the flags of the allied and associated powers, naval salutes were fired, and there were parades through the city streets.

INGENUITY GOT IN AT VERSAILLES

One American Captain Admitted by Presenting Cigarette Box Top.

A HUGE GARDEN PARTY

Shopgirls and Grandes Dames in Frantic Rushes in the Palace Park.

Copyright, 1919, by The Chicago Tribune Co.

PARIS, June 28.—The American Captain who passed in ahead by flashing the top of a cigarette box marked with the British royal arms in lieu of any other card of admission, more nearly typifies the spirit of the credentials management at the peace signing on Saturday than anything else I encountered in two hours of milling about the fairyland which the Great Louis built.

Discovering at the last moment that The Tribune photographers had been overlooked by the Hotel de Crillon contingent, I gave Photographer Brooke my card to the Hall of Mirrors and cast my lot with the rabble—for which I am truly glad. Mr. Brooke's photographs go to the United States tomorrow on the George Washington, while I have memories of two golden hours among the flowers and fountains, pretty women, and gallant men to top off this tiresome party.

The funniest thing at the peace signing was the man with an admission card. The more he had the more he was hustled in a direction opposite to that in which he desired to go. His troubles began as soon as he passed within the city gates of Versailles, where the front of the great palace was banked along the roadway with thousands of splendid polius. Between their ranks passed diplomatic motors proceeding like hearses. If any of their occupants smiled, it failed to register during the hour that I watched them.

The main courtyard of the palace on the east front was spasmodically kept cleared in order that the diplomats might enter. When the last of these had passed inside interest centred on the west side, from which the twenty-three windows of the Hall of Mirrors could be viewed.

Meanwhile, about the smaller gates stormed the crowd of ticket holders. There were seven different types displayed, at least one of which you were supposed to have, to use a ticket to the press stand in Pershing Stadium, where baseball games were played miles away, while my wife showed an invitation to Charles Sangreme's lecture on peace next Monday afternoon. The Captain already noted used the cover of a cigarette box in which he had tied blue ribbons, and we were inside the great iron gates.

Among the first of the men I saw thereafter was Captain Macdonald, of the United States Government Moving Picture Squad, formerly a Chicago newspaper man, now assigned to perpetuate in the archives in Washington the spectacle of today's ceremony.

Captain Macdonald carried every kind of credential that red tape can devise. The last I saw of him he was cheering before a squad of polius who had upset his camera, planted to catch the entering German Delegation, and were emphasing their disapproval of his boldness with charged bayonets that, no doubt to him, looked a mile long. So if you don't see the Germans on the screen at your favorite movie palace you may recollect that Captain Macdonald carried too many credentials.

His flight was through a swarm of shop girls, actresses, officers of every nation, stately wives, substantial business men, and bare legged women. All these had entered the gate with or without tickets until the gardens of Versailles surpassed in brilliancy yesterday the inclosure at Auteuil.

In the west gardens, faced by the windows of the Hall of Mirrors, the great crowd just idled around, waiting for some sign of life from any one of the twenty-three windows. Airplanes buzzed overhead and skirmoed so close to the Palace roof that the brass-hatted firemen on it ducked.

There was no cheering in the hours of waiting. You just loafed around. The police lines changed thousands of times, followed close upon the polius' heels, hoping for a better spot from which to see something that might be interesting —something besides flowers and statuary. Lovely blueblooded ladies and shop girls stood on the same garden chairs and lugged them excitedly to the next point, from which they peered over the towering soldiers' heads.

At 3:40 a gun barked from a neighboring vale. Nobody knew whether it marked the beginning or the end of the peace signing. Half a hundred thousand within the Palace gates started for the valley to watch the booming salvos. Others edged closer to the central portals between the Hall of Mirrors.

At 4:10 the doors opened and a swarm of moving picture men filed out of the Palace. Behind them was President Wilson, Prime Minister Lloyd George, and Premier Clemenceau.

The circling crowd took the polius and stood them on their heads, as you will see in your favorite playhouse. Down the great travel way that leads west from the Palace to the distant mirrored lake of Louis swept the camera men, the President, "The Tiger," and the Welshman. Around them surged the thousands, kicking up a cloud of dust, which is very bad for moving pictures.

In the van was Photographer Brooke, with my pink ticket pinned to his hat. The crowd mauled the President, slapped him on the back, and did the same for his distinguished companions. When the archives had been well stocked with films the trio started back through the crowd, now a block deep. Really, Jim Corbett never got a bigger reception, or one more hearty.

When the Big Three had gone away in their waiting limousines, General Pershing came out. Nobody mauled "Black Jack." He looked the situation over with dignity, smiled to himself, and stepped into his car. A few of us wedged in and shook his hand through an open window.

"To-day is a hell of a long way from Mexico, General," yelled a doughboy. The General stiffened for a moment, then smiled. We gave him a hand as he rolled away.

Lesser lights followed, and the crowd decided to let them depart as best they might. Everybody started for his own at about the same minute. Fenders touched tail lights all the fifteen miles back to Paris in the columns that filled the roadways. Thin lines of cheering natives flanked us as we rode.

Forwaerts Looks for Final Triumph.

LONDON, June 28.—The Berliner Nueste Nachrichten wonders that no lightning comes from Heaven to consume the Hall of Mirrors. What is happening there today, it says, is merely the final act of treason of two political parties—the Majority Socialists and the Centre Party. The Government promises us that what the German people really think about it all will be shown at the next general election.

"The judgment of Aesif has created a court on the poor wretch beaten by an iron ring of foes in the world war." is the National Zeitung's description of the signing ceremony. "A cultured people," it goes on to lament, "has been reduced to the level of the American Creole States—which, indeed, are partly represented among the victors at Versailles."

The Vorwärts thinks it noteworthy that "the formality" of signing has not aroused any interest in Germany.

"That is because we know," it adds, "that the treaty does not create a lasting and final order of things in the world. The treaty is full of injustices, brutalities, and exploitations. The world will not permit such an arbitrary disfigurement of its natural development. We do not hope, like the pan-German fools, for bloody revenge, but on the day of the greatest victory of injustice, we look forward to the coming triumph of right, which we and our working class comrades beyond our frontiers will fight for shoulder to shoulder."

German Railway Workers to Return

BERLIN, June 29, (Associated Press.) —At a meeting of railway officials and employes today it was decided by an overwhelming majority to resume work speedily on the railways affected by the strike. It is stated that a complete agreement has been reached.

"AT THE CROSSROADS," SAYS THE PRESIDENT

Way to International Understanding and Peace Has Only Been Pointed Out.

LONDON, June 29.—A peace message from President Wilson to The Daily Mail and The Weekly Dispatch is printed this morning in the latter publication. It follows:

"Many things crowd into the mind to be said about the Peace Treaty, but the thought that stands out in front of all others is that by the terms of the treaty the greatest possible measure of compensation has been provided for peoples whose homes and lives were wrecked by the storm of war, and security has been given them that the storm shall not arise again.

"In so far as we came together to insure these things, the work of the Conference is finished, but in a larger sense its work begins today. In answer to an unmistakable appeal, the League of Nations has been constituted and a covenant has been drawn which shows the way to international understanding and peace.

"We stand at the crossroads, however, and the way is only pointed out. Those who saw through the travail of war the vision of a world made secure for mankind must now consecrate their lives to its realization."

British Flag Is Burned By Sinn Fein Crowd in Dublin

DUBLIN, June 29, (Associated Press.)—The British flag was burned in Dublin Saturday night. Outside of Trinity College a number of Union Jacks were seized and the torch applied.

Cheers were given for De Valera and revolutionary songs were sung.

Sinn Fein demonstrations took place in other parts of the city.

SIMPLE CEREMONY AS WILSON SAILS

wheeled about and with a parting salute steamed back to the harbor of Brest.

Cheered by Brest Crowds.

BREST, June 29, (Associated Press).—President Wilson, the treaty with Germany signed, sailed from Brest today on his return to the United States. The U. S. S. George Washington, carrying the Presidential party, steamed from the harbor at 2:20 o'clock this afternoon.

There was a distance of only fifty feet from the point where his special train stopped, at 11:40 this morning, to that where a motor launch was waiting to convey him to the George Washington. There was little cheering and applause from the several thousands who had gathered at the embarkation pier. A procession of Socialists, singing the "Internationale," debouched from the Rue Siam as the President walked across the pier. The President waved his silk hat at the paraders.

Gathered on the wharf were French and American officials. The first to greet the President were Admiral H. Salaun and Admiral E. N. Benoit of the French Navy. Rear Admiral A. S. Halstead of the American Navy, and Major Gen. E. A. Helmick and Brig. Gen. Smedley Butler greeted the President in turn.

Mrs. Josephine Lewis of Cincinnati, representing the American Red Cross in France, presented a bouquet of Brittany roses to Mrs. Wilson. The President's wife, in a navy blue tailored dress, wore a handsome but simple little hat, apparently the latest creation from the Rue de la Paix. She smiled and thanked Mrs. Lewis and then chatted briefly with her. Mrs. Wilson appeared tired and apparently was in a hurry to reach the launch.

The band of the 10th Chasseurs played "The Star-Spangled Banner" and the "Marseillaise" as the President descended the steps to the launch. As the launch went into the stream a company of marines and veterans of the Yser presented arms, while cries of "Vive Wilson!" "Vive l'Amérique!" "Vive la Paix!" arose.

The President stood aft in the launch, waving his hat at the crowd on the National Bridge. The launch was lost to view just as the Socialist parade reached the cliffs overlooking the harbor.

"This is America," were the President's words, as he shook hands with Captain Edward McCauley, aboard the George Washington. The President and Mrs. Wilson retired to their staterooms as the engines and machinery began to roar and final orders were given.

Luncheon was served at 1 o'clock, and the meal had just been completed when the George Washington began to make headway out of the harbor. The battleship Oklahoma led the way. The destroyers Woolsey and Tarbell were on the port and starboard sides, respectively, while the Wickes and Yarnell brought up the rear.

As the ship moved out, the President appeared on the bridge wearing a cap. Rear Admiral Grayson stood near him. The President was silent as he gazed at the disappearing shores of France.

The weather was perfect, and there was not a ripple on the ocean as the George Washington emerged from the Brest roads into the Atlantic. The French destroyers Fanion and Carquois escorted the Presidential squadron to the Ushant Light. After saluting with their sirens and guns, the French warships returned to Brest.

As the George Washington disappeared in the Summer haze the President stood on the bridge waving in answer to the salute from the French warship.

Official Farewell in Paris.

PARIS, June 28.—Members of President Wilson's party, which left the Invalides Station tonight for Brest, were Mrs. Wilson, Miss Margaret Wilson, Rear Admiral Cary T. Grayson, the President's physician; Jules J. Jusserand, French Ambassador to the United States; Vance McCormick, American member of the Supreme Allied Blockade Council, of which he was Chairman; B. M. Baruch, American representative on various commissions of the Peace Conference, and Thomas W. Lamont, representative of the United States Peace Delegation on the Interallied Financial Commission.

President Poincaré said farewell to President Wilson's party at the Invalides Station. He was accompanied by M. Dubost, President of the Senate, and M. Deschanel, President of the Chamber of Deputies. Premier Clemenceau was at the station with Foreign Minister Pichon, M. Clementel, the Minister of Commerce, and M. Loucheur, the Minister of Reconstruction.

The Spanish, Italian, Japanese, and Greek envoys in Paris also were present, as were Karl Kramarz, the Premier of Czechoslovakia; General Berdoulat, the Military Governor of Paris, and many other prominent persons.

such an occasion, had declared he returned bringing peace with honor. Lloyd George dwelt rather on the justice of the bargain he had concluded, and on the labor and sacrifices by all classes that had made it possible. It was, he declared, "Peace charged with hope," and he bade his hearers rejoice in it, not in a spirit of boastfulness, but in a spirit of reverence.

One allusion there was, and a telling one, to perils that still beset England. The Premier, as he thought of the sacrifices of millions of valiant men, asked that Englishmen maintain their spirit of concord and co-operation to establish the new world on a firm foundation. As he spoke, and paid tributes to others for what they had done in the war, voices from the crowd called out that he had helped win it, too, and as he bowed his thanks and withdrew, round after round of cheers broke out again.

Child Gives Him Flowers.

The crowd began to assemble at Victoria Station two hours before the arrival of the train. As the train stopped, the King advanced with Mrs. Lloyd George. The Premier first shook hands with the King, to whom he spoke for a few seconds, and then turned and kissed his wife very heartily. He appeared in the happiest of humor as he shook hands with his ministerial colleagues, chatting and laughing.

A pretty incident occurred as Lloyd George neared the waiting room. A small girl ran forward, holding up a bouquet of white flowers. The Premier, who loves children, took the flowers, bent down and kissed the little donor.

The King and the Premier had just entered the royal carriage, when a New Zealand soldier stepped forward from the line of overseas men who had a place of honor across the road. The carriage was stopped, and the soldier presented a piece of white paper to the Premier. It was a request for his autograph, a request with which the Premier at once laughingly complied.

Overseas soldiers were present in large numbers, and, as usual, they were most irrepressible in their enthusiasm. During the procession to Buckingham Palace, these came through the packed crowds, driving forward with irresistible force, a small, square mass of Australian soldiers, packed like the Romafi soldiers in what in those far off days was known as "tortoise" formation. On the back of the "tortoise" was a figure, very unsteadily balanced and wearing an Australian soldier's feathered "wideawake." At sight of him, the crowd rocked with laughter, for as it drew near, so precariously transported, it was seen to be William Hughes, the Australian Prime Minister, his big, powerful features and grey moustache looking queerly out of place beneath the bushman's hat.

Newspaper Tributes to Premier.

The Chronicle, in a tribute to Lloyd George, says this morning:

"Negotiating with colleagues who viewed many issues in sharply opposed lights, it was necessary for him to employ to the utmost those rare gifts of conciliation and mediation for which he is so conspicuous. That the conference did not break down; that the immense range of the controversies has been subdued within four corners of an agreed and signed document; that peace affecting the vital interests of all the greatest nations in the world has been signed simultaneously by twenty-seven separate powers—for this Lloyd George deserves credit inferior to none of his compeers. The part which he has played was that which his countrymen expected of him, and he has played it well."

The Chronicle parliamentary correspondent says that Lloyd George, recognizing the anxiety of members of Parliament to hear, at the earliest possible moment, some first-hand announcement about the Peace Treaty, has decided to attend the House of Commons this afternoon and to make a preliminary statement. The communication will be comparatively brief, but it will include an announcement to the effect that a full statement on the Peace Conference will be made Thursday, when necessary steps also will be taken to obtain ratification of the Treaty. The Premier, in meantime, will take advantage of the opportunity to rest his voice, which has been hoarse since he suffered a chill a week ago.

At every church in London yesterday the congregations rivaled in number those who attended on Nov. 17, the first Sunday after the armistice.

At the request of the Bishop of London a special Te Deum was sung throughout the diocese and at all places of worship of whatever denomination the note of thankfulness for peace and of hope for the future was struck by the preachers. The Archbishop of Canterbury, preaching at Lambeth Parish Church, said that every intelligent man in the country was thinking of the coming peace in something like the way it had been expressed by the King, "Peace has been signed, and God is to be thanked."

In the afternoon a band of the Salvation Army with the King's approval played in the forecourt of Buckingham Palace. The selections were mostly sacred and concluded with "The Star Spangled Banner," the "Marseillaise," and the national anthem.

LONDON, June 29, (By Associated Press.)—Premier Lloyd George, on his return from Paris this evening, drove with the King to Buckingham Palace, and was acclaimed with triumphant cheers by tremendous crowds along the whole route.

After paying his respects to the Queen, the Prime Minister drove in the royal carriage to Downing Street. Similar ovations greeted him along the way, and in response to the continued cheering he briefly addressed the assemblage from the window of his residence. He spoke of the peace which had come to the world, and said:

"I sincerely trust that the unity of spirit and concord which won this great peace will continue until we have established on a firm foundation the new world, won by the sacrifices of millions of brave men. Let us thank God for the great victory, not in a spirit of boastfulness, which was the downfall of Germany, but in a spirit of reverence worthy of the noble sacrifices that have been made."

The Premier arrived at 6:30 o'clock. At the station to meet him were King George, the Prince of Wales, Prince Albert, Earl Curzon, the Lord Mayor, a crowd of ministers and other influential personages.

The King, who had met Mrs. Lloyd George in the royal waiting room, accompanied her to the Premier's saloon when the train reached Victoria Station, and directly after Mr. Lloyd George had greeted his wife the King shook his hand cordially. Then the King welcomed Viscount Milner, General Smuts, General Botha and the other members of the Peace Mission.

COMPACT WITH FRANCE SIGNED BY WILSON

Said to Specify That Violation of Treaty by Germany Allows France to Ask Aid.

PARIS, June 29.—The Franco-American convention was signed yesterday on behalf of the two Governments, according to the newspapers.

It is said that the covenant includes several articles and specifies that violations of the peace treaty by Germany will give France the right to request American and British assistance.

Le Journal says that the coincidence in the signing of the convention and the peace treaty on the same day is part of the spirit of union among the associated States to see that the treaty is carried out.

The newspapers generally urge the French people to begin at once the work of economic reconstruction.

The Polish treaty, signed by President Wilson before he left Paris, in which Poland agrees to guarantee the rights of minorities, will probably be published Tuesday. This treaty, or agreement, together with the undertaking President Wilson signed with France, was signed privately and was overshadowed by the documents signed ceremoniously at Versailles.

CELEBRATORS FILL STREETS OF PARIS

Soldiers Pelted with Flowers and Confetti — American Headquarters Cheered.

OTHER CITIES CELEBRATE

Socialist Writer Sounds the Only Discordant Note in the French Press.

PARIS, June 28.—The formal ending of the war by the signing of the Peace Treaty was celebrated with enthusiasm by the population of Paris tonight. The French soldiers, who for nearly five years withstood some of the strongest onslaughts of the Germans, were the centre of the crowds of celebrants on the principal boulevards, the Place de la Concorde, and elsewhere. Marching columns of troops drew wild cheers from the throngs in the streets, and the soldiers were pelted with flowers and horizon blue confetti wherever they appeared.

Large crowds were massed in front of the Hôtel de Crillon, the American headquarters, and salvos of cheers for America were given. It had been expected that President Wilson would leave Paris from the hotel, but the crowds were disappointed.

The Strasbourg statue had an American flag at its apex, typifying the efforts of American soldiers on the fighting front in Alsace. The hotels rounabout were brilliantly lighted by electricity and gas for the first time in five years.

Except for the inevitable lack of spontaneity, the celebration was a duplicate of that the night the armistice was signed. There were many American soldiers in the throngs, drawn to Paris by the interallied games. The refrain "Hail, Hail, the Gang's All Here" was heard almost as frequently as that of the "Marseillaise." American Army trucks carried cheering loads, and American flags waved everywhere. Representatives of the British dominions also took a prominent part in the noise-making.

Impromptu orchestras appeared on every corner. Young and old danced, and everyone kissed everyone else. The population dined early so as to have more time for the merry-making.

At Marseilles, Toulon and Cherbourg, as well as other seaports, warships were dressed in flags, salutes were fired, church bells were rung and there were illuminations and torchlight processions. At Bordeaux the departure of the American students from the university made the occasion of a brilliant well reception by the municipality.

Amid the chorus of triumphant joy the French press over the signing of the Peace Treaty, the only frankly serious note is that of Marcel Cachin, the Socialist leader. Writing in L'Humanité, he said.

"The peoples were absent from the ostentatious ceremony in the Hall of Mirrors. The signatures are not those of their representatives. They take no part in this treaty. It is not thus that they understand the future of civilization and humanity."

Other radical journals, like Le Journal, Le Rappel and Libre Parole, do not disguise their uneasiness over what they call the menace of Teutonic regeneracy.

"Muzzled they may be, but crushed never," says Le Radical, while Le Rappel declares:

"Bismarck's military and diplomatic work is crumbled in dust, but his political work remains."

It adds that the greatest mistake the Allies was to have treated with Germany as an entity.

On the other hand, Jules Cambon, in the Echo de Paris, points out that over peace has deceived some hopes, but this peace is the first at which the conquerors united to decide the fate of the world, have begun by proclaiming that they were determined to make a righteous peace, to repair past iniquities and to salve the wounds of centuries.

PARIS, June 28, (Delayed.)—The President to which President Wilson and the United States bulked in the world's and the peace negotiations could be gauged by Paris crowds late this afternoon and tonight, following the signing of peace. Everywhere the crowds screamed "Vive l'Amerique" or "Vive Wilson" and picked out American soldiers and sailors. And even civilians, to cheer on the streets. In cafés and clubs Frenchmen stepped up to Americans and asked permission to buy them drinks, toasting the American and President Wilson.

There could be no doubt in any observer's mind that the rank and file of the French people, rich and poor alike, bore the same gratitude to the United States that they did on the day America declared war and the day General Pershing arrived.

They maintain the same high opinion of President Wilson as a just peacemaker as they did on the day he reached Paris and toured the principal streets amid cheering throngs.

The only time America was not cheered was when French polius and artillery passed through the streets to stations where they had been firing salutes, when they were cheered frenziedly.

An official street fête was scheduled to begin at nightfall with torchlight processions and a band. This was a slow program, however, for the people, which began scattered parades as soon as the subways and street cars brought the morning crowds downtown. The absence of great numbers of employes closed many large stores and most of the small ones before noon.

Three American bands, scheduled for afternoon and evening demonstrations, stepped out Saturday morning to take up, giving to the impromptu parades a feature that always has been used by the Americans of Paris—music.

Influencing the Dealer

Most new advertisers have (as in the cartoons) a dotted line reaching from the left eye to the retailer, and from the right eye to the consumer.

"Impress the trade" with your initial campaign, and some jobbers and retailers will stack the goods in anticipation of a brisk demand from the public.

If the brisk demand materializes—well and good—if it doesn't, the trade will probably contrive to sell the goods anyway and thereafter become less impressionable.

The heart of a permanent success in advertising—except perhaps for suspension bridges—is the "repeat order."

Granting always, that the new line merits continued patronage, the great demand will commence after the third year of advertising. The vast slow-moving public will then make its wishes known unmistakably to the least impressionable of dealers.

Because retailers know of the success of old and established advertisers, it is possible for the new advertiser to secure a considerable preliminary distribution on faith.

It is best to consider these initial orders—these first-time retail openings—not as sales, but as opportunities to be justified by repeat orders.

You can best influence the dealer by continuing to influence the public.

Retailers prefer to sell goods that are in demand.

TREATY CEREMONY WENT WITH SPEED

Businesslike Procedure of Clemenceau Took Away Much of the Solemnity.

CROWDING MARRED EVENT

Many of the Spectators Were Unable to Observe Details of the Signing.

UNEXPECTED THRILLS LACKING

Buzz of Conversation Filled the Hall Before the Signing Was Completed.

By RICHARD V. OULAHAN.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, June 28.—Peace came to the world at 3:45 o'clock this afternoon—the real peace, or at least the beginning of peace. The last signature to the treaty embodying the drastic terms which the victorious allied Governments imposed upon defeated and humiliated Germany was attached to the history-making document at that moment. Hardly was the ink of the final signature dry when the old palace of Versailles, where the momentous ceremony took place, shook from the concussion of the guns in the park outside that announced in salvos that Germany had capitulated.

Tonight Paris is merrymaking as President Wilson departs from the scenes of his strenuous labors of nearly seven months, to enter upon a campaign at home with the object of bringing about America's ratification of all the treaty contains.

Those privileged to witness the scene which marked Germany's formal submission to the will of her conquerors were keyed up to a high pitch of excitation. There had been everything to quicken and stimulate the imagination. The very room where the ceremony occurred—the wonderful Galérie des Glaces, or Hall of Mirrors—has all the spirit of romance and sentiment. It was here—and this was the foremost thought in the minds of most of those present—that France signed the humiliating conditions forced upon her by her Prussian enemies who had her by the throat. It was here Bismarck proclaimed William of Prussia as ruler of that great empire now brought to ruin and despair by the ambitions of his grandson.

As that occasion marked the moment of France's greatest humiliation, so today's event marked the return of France to her own and furnished ground for happiness to many nations in that the terrific struggle of more than four years had been finished, not to be renewed.

Thrills Strangely Lacking.

But, strangely enough, the thrills one hoped to receive from witnessing the act which concluded peace with Germany did not materialize. There was lacking in the ceremony that setting and atmosphere which one had been led to expect. It was not merely that the proceedings dragged—it was something more than that. Perhaps it was too much of a show to permit it to be the occasion of great solemnity. Taking it all in all, it was not nearly so impressive as that other gathering in the Trianon Palace Hotel near by on May 7, when the German peace plenipotentiaries received from the allied peacemakers the text of the conditions that were embodied in the document signed today.

One thing that dissipated the solemnity from the final act of the German war—if it may be so described—was the manner in which the spectators had been provided for, or rather had not been provided for. After all the talk over the limited number of tickets of admission, it was apparent to those present in the great Galérie des Glaces this afternoon that the ticket distribution had been made with a lavish hand. The seating arrangements were such—although this particular fault was with the dimensions and conformation of the chamber, and not with those who were in charge of the program—that a considerable number could not see the ceremony from the places assigned them. As a result, many of these pushed forward, and, besides crowding the press section with spectators, shut off the view of others. This and other circumstances caused confusion, and little attention had apparently been given to provisions for maintaining order.

The ceremony itself was devoid of any pronounced air of solemnity. Not a word was said until after the German delegates had taken their places. Then Premier Clemenceau, in quick words, whose tone showed none of the elation he must have felt, announced that the proceedings were opened and called upon the enemy and allied plenipotentiaries to sign the Peace Treaty and the supplementary documents pertaining to it. From that time on until the end of the ceremony there was merely a succession of delegates advancing to the table upon which the conventions had been laid and signing their names. The whole scene was concluded in thirty-seven minutes. There was no demonstration at any time, and when the last signature had been attached the German delegates withdrew and the allied representatives went quietly away.

President Wilson attached his signature to all three documents and rose from the table at 3:16. He walked slowly back to his seat, and Secretary Lansing and the other Americans, having signed, soon joined him. Then the British delegation went to the treaty table, Lloyd George and Balfour leading. After them came the delegates of the British Dominions, among them Smuts, the former Boer General, who is a member of the British War Cabinet. Immediately after Smuts had attached his signature, a statement was distributed to the press in which he criticised the treaty and said that he had signed it because it was imperatively necessary to close the war. The last man in the British overseas delegation was the turbaned Maharaja of Bikanir, who is a Major General in the British Army.

A Hush When Clemenceau Signed.

By that time conversation had begun among the spectators. The proceedings probably seemed prosy to some of them. There was silence, however, when Premier Clemenceau, at the head of the French plenipotentiaries, advanced to the treaty table. Then came Italy's delegation, led by Sonnino, the former Foreign Minister, and next the Japanese delegates.

The buzz of conversation was renewed. The moving-picture and other camera men who had managed to get in the space where the delegates sat edged forward and took photographs rapidly. Word went around that the Chinese delegates had refused to sign on account of the provisions of the treaty ceding Shantung to Japan. The conversation grew louder. It was apparent that the spectators had lost interest after the representatives of the small nations began to advance to the treaty table.

Before most of those in the room realized it the ceremony was over. The first intimation that many of them received came when they heard the sound of the guns in the park booming out a salute to peace. A considerable number of the spectators went to the windows to watch the artillery and the crowds outside. A detachment of Republican Guards took places behind the row of seats of the secretaries, shutting off the view of what was going on among the delegates.

Premier Clemenceau rose again. The peace had been signed, he said, and the proceedings were closed. He asked that everybody keep his seat for a few moments. This was to enable the German delegates to withdraw. They did so quickly. A minute or so later the allied delegates and the spectators began to disperse. Outside the guns boomed. Those within heard cheers from the crowd as Wilson, Clemenceau, and the other delegates appeared on the steps of the palace and were photographed.

So ended one of the greatest occasions in history. It was marked by great simplicity, and whatever it lacked in impressiveness was balanced by the quickness and dispatch with which the proceedings were conducted.

The Setting of the Ceremony.

Tens of thousands of American tourists are familiar with the Galérie des Glaces. Since America entered the war more tens of thousands of American soldiers, sailors, and welfare workers have had opportunities of inspecting its beauties and impressive proportions. "Gallery" rather than "hall" describes the impression the chamber conveys. It is a broad room in the sense in which the word is used to describe interiors, but it has an appearance of narrowness on account of its great length. Three of its sides are lined with mirrors—immense affairs extending from floor to ceiling. The remaining side, which extends the full length of the room, has a multitude of windows of the same generous proportions as the mirrors. Its decoration is highly ornate in that lavish French style which goes in for much gold and coloring. The ceilings are crowded with scenes from French history, interspersed with ornamental designs in which there are the inevitable cherubs—pink ones that cling to one another in the conventional manner of cherubs. There are more cherubs at the top of the columns that frame each doorway and window and mirror, but these stand out in relief and are heavily coated with gold. The whole room has impressiveness in its dimensions and general appearance, even to partisans of simplicity in interior decoration who are shocked at the great display of color and the attempt to fill every nook and cranny with some artistic production.

In this famous room the spectators and those who were to participate officially in the ceremony assembled slowly. Premier Clemenceau, President of the Peace Conference, was one of the first to arrive. He chatted with several acquaintances as he walked to the seat reserved for him at the centre of the long table running along the side of the room which faced the windows that look out on the beautiful park where the Kings and Queens of France took their promenades and held gay fêtes. Secretary Lansing had preceded him—in fact, was the first of the delegates of the principal powers to arrive. The great throng of secretaries busied themselves arranging papers. Around the room were soldiers of the Republican Guard, in their striking uniforms of blue coats, heavily piped and decorated with red and gold; white doeskin trousers, high boots, and metal helmets like those of the old Romans, from which floated long plumes of black horsehair.

The Space Arrangements.

In the centre of the room, taking up something more than half of the space, tables had been arranged in a hollow square for the accommodation of the plenipotentiaries. Behind them at the narrow ends, were places for the secretaries, among whom were Messrs. Harrison, Patchin, and Kirk of the American Peace Commission. The table at which sat President Wilson, Premier Clemenceau, Premier Lloyd George, and other representatives of the great powers extended the entire length of the gallery. At one of the narrow ends space was reserved for spectators. Mrs. Wilson was there, with Miss Margaret Wilson, Miss Edith Benham, and Admiral Grayson. At the other narrow end, and occupying a similar space—something less than a quarter of the room—were the representatives of the press of nearly every country in the world, most of whom had difficulty in the earlier stages of the proceedings in seeing what was going on because of the spectators who had crowded into their places.

The Secretary-General of the conference had brought in official drafts of the Peace Treaty and the two other agreements before the ceremony actually began. The other documents were the protocols for the Government of the Rhine provinces during the period of allied occupation and setting forth the modifications and modifying interpretations contained in the final note of the allied peacemakers to the German plenipotentiaries.

Henry White, Colonel House, and General Bliss of the American delegation joined Mr. Lansing at the head table. It was eight minutes of 3 when President Wilson arrived and seated himself beside and to the right of Premier Clemenceau, with Mr. Lansing beside him.

Premier Lloyd George, Mr. Balfour, and other members of the British delegation sat at M. Clemenceau's left. There was much conversation going on when the President entered, and the room presented none of the appearance that one might expect from the character of the occasion. Until the proceedings were formally opened Mr. Wilson and the other distinguished delegates spent the time writing their autographs on the souvenir programs provided for the plenipotentiaries.

Everybody looked expectant when 3 o'clock came. But M. Clemenceau was not there. He had left his seat a few minutes before. However, he returned in a short time. Conversation among spectators, which had halted when Clemenceau came back, was renewed. Many people—delegates and spectators alike—were standing. From the rear of the crowd came a hissing sound and low calls of "Assis!" (sit down.) Those standing took the hint, and some semblance of order was restored. Secretary General Dutasta made a tour of the room to see if all the delegations were present and reported to Clemenceau that the scene was set for the great event.

Entrance of German Envoys.

Then came the German delegates, Drs. Müller and Bell, attended by the members of their secretariat. They were unannounced. There was a craning of necks to catch a glimpse of the enemy envoys, but only a comparatively small number of those present got a good look. The Germans held their heads high. They were shown to seats at a table extending across one of the narrow sides of the hall to the left of those at the head table—the side nearest the space reserved for spectators and furthest removed from the seats for the press.

Without waiting a moment the aged Premier of France, in the brisk way of his, got down to business. He announced that the documents to be signed were identical with the copies furnished the members of the German delegation, and asked the German representatives to sign these documents first. In translating, Captain Mantaux, the official interpreter of the conference, referred to the Germans as "the German delegates." Somebody called out: "The delegates of the German Reich," and Captain Mantaux made the correction quickly.

Müller and Bell came forward to sign the treaty and protocols. They walked around their side of the table, and into the centre of the well, where a leather-covered flat desk had been placed. Upon this the three documents were laid. A secretary and some officials of the conference preceded them.

It was just 3:13 when Müller attached his signature to all three. Bell followed, and both then walked back to their places. Müller's face and neck were flushed crimson, and it was evident that both Germans felt keenly the position in which they were placed.

President Wilson was the first of the allied plenipotentiaries to sign. At a word from M. Dutasta he rose and walked around the tables to the right, taking the route opposite to that which the Germans had taken. Mr. Lansing followed close behind, and then Mr. White, Colonel House, and General Bliss. There was no demonstration when the President walked to the treaty table. Before the proceedings began somebody started to applaud—it was when Clemenceau entered the room—but he never got further than one weak handclap. Manifestations of disapproval came thick and fast. The spectators had learned their lesson, and after that there was no show of emotion during the entire proceedings.

ROME CROWDS RIOT AGAINST NITTI CABINET

Try to Reach Premier's Residence But Are Driven Back by Troops and Police.

ROME, June 29, (Associated Press.)—Serious disorders marked an anti-Government demonstration in Rome last night. The demonstrants attempted to reach the residence of Premier Nitti, but were driven back by large forces of military and police. Order finally was restored after midnight.

Prior to the demonstration a largely attended mass meeting was held at the Augusteum. Patriotic and inflammatory speeches were delivered. Gabriele d'Annunzio was present and made a speech, apparently adding to the excitement of the audience, which left the hall and began the demonstration.

SMUTS CALLS PEACE TERMS TOO HARSH

Says He Signed the Treaty Because Closing of War Was of First Necessity.

HOPES FOR MODIFICATIONS

Fears Chaos in Central Europe Unless Allies Aid Enemy Powers in Reconstruction.

Copyright, 1919, by The New York Times Company.
Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, June 29.—General Jan Smuts tonight made public a statement regarding his attitude toward the Peace Treaty.

[General Smuts created a stir at the signing of the treaty Saturday by presenting to the Peace Commissioners a protest against some of the treaty's terms. The statement contained in this cablegram is supposed to embody the terms of the protest.]

The statement, in part, follows:

"I signed the Peace Treaty, not because I consider it a satisfactory document, but because it is imperatively necessary to close the war; because the world needs peace above all else, and nothing could be more fatal than the continuance of the state of suspense between war and peace. The months since the armistice was signed, perhaps, have been as upsetting, unsettling, and ruinous to Europe as the previous four years of war. I look upon the Peace Treaty as the close of these two chapters of war and armistice, and only on that ground do I agree to it.

"I say this not in criticism, not because I wish to find fault with the work done, but rather because I feel that in the treaty we have not yet achieved the real peace to which our peoples were looking, and because I feel that the real work of making peace will only begin after this treaty has been signed, and a definite halt has thereby been called to the destructive passions that have been desolating Europe for nearly five years.

"This treaty is simply a liquidation of the war situation in the world. There are guarantees laid down which we all hope will soon be found out of harmony with the new peaceful temper and unarmed state of our former enemies. There are punishments foreshadowed, over most of which a calmer mood may yet prefer to pass the sponge of oblivion. There are indemnities stipulated which cannot be exacted without grave injury to the industrial revival of Europe, and which it will be in the interests of all to render more tolerable and moderate.

"The war resulted not only in the utter defeat of the enemy armies, but it has gone immeasurably farther. We witness the collapse of the whole political and economic fabric of Central and Eastern Europe. Unemployment, starvation, anarchy, war, disease and despair stalk through the land, and unless the victors can effectively extend a helping hand to the defeated and broken peoples a large part of Europe is threatened with exhaustion and decay. Russia has already walked into the night, and the risk that the rest may follow is very grave indeed.

"The effects of this disaster would not be confined to Central and Eastern Europe, for civilization is one body, and we are all members of one another. The supreme necessity is laid on all to grapple with this situation. To the peoples of the United States and of the British Empire, who have been exceptionally blessed with the good things of life, I would make a special appeal. Let them exert themselves to the utmost in this great work of saving the wreckage of life and industry in continental Europe. They have a great mission, and in fulfilling it they will be as much blessed as blessing.

"All this is possible, and, I hope, capable of accomplishment, but only on two conditions. In the first place, the Germans must convince our peoples of their good faith, of their complete sincerity, through a real honest effort to fulfill their obligations under the treaty to the extent of their ability. Second, our allied peoples must remember that God gave them overwhelming victory, victory far beyond their greatest dreams, not for small, selfish ends, not for financial or economic advantages, but for the attainment of the great human ideals for which our heroes gave their lives, and which are the real victors in this war of ideals.

"There are numerous pin pricks which will cease to pain under the healing influences of a new international atmosphere. A real peace of peoples ought to follow, complete, and amend the peace of statesmen in this treaty. However, two achievements of far-reaching importance for the world are definitely recorded. One is the destruction of Prussian militarism; the other is the institution of the League of Nations. I am confident the League of Nations will yet prove the path of escape for Europe out of the ruin brought by this war, but the league as yet is only the form. It still requires quickening life, which can come only from the active interest and vitalising contact of the peoples themselves.

"A new creative spirit, which is once more moving among the peoples in their anguish, must fill the institution with life and with the inspiration for pacific ideals born of this war, and so convert it into a real instrument of progress. In that way, abolition of militarism—in this treaty, unfortunately, confined to enemy—may soon come as a blessing and relief to the allied peoples as well, and enemy peoples should at the earliest possible date join the league. Not in selfish domination, but in the common service for the great human cause lies the true path of national progress. This joint collaboration is especially necessary today for the reconstruction of a ruined and broken world."

OBSERVE KOSSOVO DAY.

Serbians Celebrate Anniversary of Victory Over Turks.

Serbians throughout the country yesterday celebrated the anniversary of the battle of Kossovo, the Serbian National Memorial Day. In this city a memorial service held in the Cathedral of St. John the Divine in the morning, at which the Rev. Howard C. Robbins, Dean of the Cathedral, preached the sermon. In the evening a service was held at the Washington Square Methodist Episcopal Church. An address was made by Major M. H. Creasy, who will sail in a few days at the head of a unit of physicians and nurses for the Serbian Relief Committee.

After declaring that it would take years to establish permanent peace, Dean Robbins said that "the very imperfection of the League of Nations is an additional reason why this country should be a member and use its great influence in the interest of liberty and justice."

Major Creasy told of his experience in Serbia as an army physician and declared that that nation had rendered a greater service than any other ally. If Serbia had accepted the ultimatum that was repeatedly hurled at her by Austria, he said, the Kaiser would have been able to have built the railroad from Berlin to Bagdad.

BRESLAU PROCLAIMED IN STATE OF SIEGE

Troops Fall Back Temporarily From Hamburg to Avoid Bloodshed.

LONDON, June 30.—A state of siege was proclaimed at Breslau Saturday night and Government troops occupied the railway station after short resistance by the strikers, according to a Berlin dispatch to the Wireless Press.

The State Commissary has decreed compulsory work for Breslau workmen.

BERLIN, June 28.—The Government troops of General von Lettow-Vorbeck attempted to enter Hamburg today, but retired when they were met by a large mob, including many women.

The Communists, in control at Hamburg, had, it is said, promised they would offer no opposition to the entry of the Government troops. When the troops were met by the mob, however, it was decided to retire temporarily to avoid possible bloodshed.

The date for a definite advance on Hamburg is uncertain. The Government forces include Schleswig, Brandenburg, Bavaria, Saxon, and naval detachments.

WORK OF RED CROSS FOR TROOPS IN FRANCE

89,539 Patients Treated, 37,000 in a Month, in Twenty-two Hospitals.

WASHINGTON, June 29.—The extent of the hospital activities of the American Red Cross in France is set forth in a report of the Bureau of Hospital Administration prepared for the War Department. It shows that during the conflict the Red Cross furnished more than 1,110,000 days of hospital care for American soldiers, admitting to its hospitals a total of 89,539 patients, 37,000 being admitted in the last month of the war. When the fighting ceased the organization was operating twenty-two military hospitals with 14,326 beds occupied.

Hospitalization was but one phase of work of the Red Cross for sick and wounded soldiers. It undertook also the manufacture of all splints and the nitrous oxide gas used as an anaesthetic by the army, the construction of emergency hospitals, supervision of diet kitchens, and the operation of thirteen dispensaries, eight infirmaries, and eleven convalescent homes throughout France, and at the same time meeting innumerable emergency calls by the army for hospital supplies and equipment. In addition to all this the bureau extended assistance of many kinds to 2,800 French hospitals.

In the last nine months of 1918 the American Red Cross delivered the following surgical supplies for American wounded: 21,088,080 dressings, compresses, packings, and paddings, absorbent pads and bandages, 41,957,426 sponges, 518,304 bed pads, 177,726 drains and 1,463,200 splints and accessories. In one month, August, there was sent from the Paris warehouse alone 12,798,115 surgical dressings, 77,101 surgical instruments, 15,300 pounds of drugs, and 1,820 beds and cots. The range of miscellaneous equipment the bureau was called upon to furnish may be gained from the following list: 88 Besseneau tents, 3 tortoise tents, 96 marquis tents, 120 barracks, 7 portable laundries, 5 ice-making machines, 4 disinfecting machines, 7 large and 3 small laundries, 2 twenty-spray showers, with delousing plant, 2 forty-spray showers, 41 eight-spray showers, 48 sterilizers, 10 laboratory outfits, and X-ray, dental, and electrical outfits.

In organizing the hospital administration the Red Cross formed a staff of experts in various medical and surgical lines. The need of this was demonstrated when requests began to come in from the field. Requisitions were often made under great stress, the writers sometimes having nothing more than an envelope or cigarette paper to scribble them on, and no definite specifications could be given. It was then the duty of the bureau's experts to determine the exact character and quantity of supplies to send.

As example of the way emergencies were met is shown in the report by the incident of a request for 3,000 blankets and several thousand pillows, pajamas, dressings, surgical instruments, and medicines, which reached the bureau at 4 P. M., July 18, from the Chateau-Thierry battlefront. Four warehouses were visited in taxicabs by as many officers from the bureau, a truck was loaded with the necessary supplies by 8 in the evening and at midnight it had reached the firing line.

One night during the same battle a veteran army officer arrived in Paris at 1 A. M. He found the medical offices of the Red Cross open, and after making his needs known, he was given a bed in the office. Two hours later he was awakened, his supplies ready at the door, having been gathered in that short space from three warehouses. Later this officer returned to Paris and reported that the work of the Red Cross that night had made it possible for every wounded soldier in his division to have a chance to recover. Had it not been for the supplies, he said, 60 per cent. of them would not have had this chance.

FEARS GERMANS MAY GAIN SEA PRESTIGE

Reports of Activity in Dockyards with Fleet Under Neutral Flags.

BUILDING DURING THE WAR

Shipping of Nearly 750,000 Tons in Steel Cargo Carriers Turned Out.

If shipping plans for the next five years, which Germany is supposed to harbor, succeed they will place her third in maritime merchant power, according to Henry C. Wiltbank, in The Rudder. Mr. Wiltbank says that Germany's dockyards are rumored to have been surprisingly busy even during the war, and that she is maintaining a big merchant fleet under neutral flags. He also asserts that German technical supervision and capital are evident in the management of neutral shipyards.

"That Germany will try to come back is as certain as that she will come back unless co-operative international action is taken to prevent her return to her old power and old methods," says Mr. Wiltbank. "The fact that she is practically without merchant tonnage today is no guarantee of her helplessness for the future. Nor is the frequently cited point that her shipyards must build for the allied nations for years to come warrant that she can secure no seagoing tonnage for her own use.

"It is only within the very recent past that the world has begun to learn of what developed in Germany in connection with German shipping during the war period. The tale of what happened behind the mask of secrecy thrown upon its maritime affairs by Teutonism is still far from complete. Gradually, however, the story is being pieced together, and each successive development is a blow at the contention that Germany may be dismissed from consideration as a force in connection with the future of world shipping. She will not rank with the leaders again for years to come, but the years may be very few, and she may be in a position to make her competition felt within a very short time.

"Developments since the signing of the armistice indicate that Germany actually did turn out during the war period not far from 750,000 gross tons and that the greater part of this was composed of steel cargo-carriers.

"Records of the Germanischer Lloyd, which have reached this country in the last few weeks, give the German output from 1914 to 1917, inclusive, as 212 steamships, aggregating 630,000 tons.

"That Germany during the war worked with an eye to her after-war trade is shown by the way in which she sought to extend her sphere of shipping influence by negotiating for the control of shipyards in neutral countries. Some instances of this were cited recently by the British publication, The Syren and Shipping, which stated:

"'Negotiations have been taking place for the acquisition of a Dutch yard by the Hamburg owner, Wilhelm Hemsoth. We have already reported the movement to found a new yard at Ronneby in Sweden, backed by German money and under German technical direction. In the Baltic provinces of Russia and in Finland similar efforts are being made.'"

TO ACT ON POWER BILLS.

Senator Jones Predicts Legislation Soon on Water Resources.

WASHINGTON, June 29.—Western and Southern Senators and Representatives, pressing for water-power legislation to unlock the resources of their States, expect to win their fight in Congress during the next few weeks, after years of effort.

Senator Jones of Washington, Chairman of the Commerce Committee, author of one of the pending water-power bills in the Senate, and who will take charge of the legislation on the floor, announced today that "after a long delay Congress is about to act."

The House is half way through a bill by Representative Esch of Wisconsin, Chairman of the House Commerce Committee. It is identical in terms with the measure which passed both House and Senate during the last Congress and had reached the stage of a conference report, which also was accepted by the House, but which failed in the Senate on account of the filibuster.

Measures practically the same have been introduced in the Senate by Senators Bankhead of Alabama and Walsh of Montana. Senator Shields has introduced another bill, the same as twice was passed by the Senate in previous Congresses, and Senator Jones also has introduced a bill much the same as the one now under consideration in the House. Still another bill, embodying the ideas of Gifford Pinchot, has been introduced by Senator Lenroot of Wisconsin, and is understood to have been drawn by Mr. Pinchot and his attorneys.

The support of Western and Southern members seems to be centring around the Esch and Jones bills with the expectation that they will be consolidated.

Out of the consolidation the supporters of water-power legislation expect to get a measure which, being the same as was approved by Congress at the last session, will still be indorsed by Secretaries Lane, Houston, and Baker, who compose the Interdepartmental Water-power Committee.

Doubtful Compliments!

Will your executor welcome his appointment?

MANY men figure it out about like this:

"'J. B.' is my best friend. I have known him for twenty-five years. He is himself a successful manufacturer and a director in at least three large corporations.

"He is my children's 'Uncle J——,' and all my family affairs are open secrets to him. In my will I will name him as the executor of my estate."

But wait:

True, you have paid your friend a compliment. But he is already a very busy man. It takes much time and a peculiar type of experience to settle an estate. Can he spare the time from his own business?

Will the executorship prove a burden? Will he really welcome his appointment?

Perhaps these vital questions raise a problem in your mind. You can solve it in naming

THE COLUMBIA TRUST COMPANY to settle your estate

As executor of your will what duties would we assume? Here are a few of them:

1. Take possession of all property and become familiar with the affairs of the estate. This requires an experience not to be justly expected of an untrained individual.
2. List all property in a complete inventory. This demands a knowledge of accounting.
3. File returns for payment of Federal and State taxes. Also, promptly pay such taxes to secure benefit of the discount as provided by law. This demands constant watchfulness and intimate tax knowledge.
4. Advertise for debts. Failure to do this would delay payment of legacies and the settlement of the estate.
5. Pay legacies and residuary bequests as directed by the will. Columbia Trust Company handling assures promptness and thorough responsibility.

The fees for such service are moderate and fixed by law.

If you now feel that the administration of your estate deserves searching consideration, wouldn't it be a wise step at least to talk it over with the Columbia Trust Company? Such a talk implies no obligation. Please ask for a Vice-President at any one of our branches.

40,000 IN BOSTON HEAR DE VALERA

He Appeals to United States to Frame New League Covenant to Include Ireland.

CALLS TREATY A MOCKERY

Mayor Extends City's Good Wishes and Cardinal O'Connell Sends Greetings.

BOSTON, July 29.—Eamonn de Valera, President of the "Irish Republic," appealed to the United States today to frame at Washington a new covenant for a League of Nations which would give Ireland a place among the nations of the world. The Peace Treaty signed at Versailles yesterday, he said, was a mockery and would remain so unless America drew up a covenant founded on "the equality of right amongst nations, small no less than great."

Speaking to an enthusiastic crowd of more than 40,000 persons which thronged Fenway Park, stands and field, the Irish leader read a prepared address, explaining that he must be careful what he said in this country.

His lieutenant, Harry J. Boland, a member of the Irish Parliament, was more direct.

"We are here to plead the cause of Ireland," said Mr. Boland. "We have no wish to interfere in American politics, but we do ask you not to put your name to a document which will perpetuate the slavery of our people."

He said the young Irish "Republic" asked America to finish under President Wilson "the proud work of emancipation begun by Washington," adding, "we will guarantee in Ireland that there will be no peace until Ireland is free."

The appeal of the Irish leaders to the American people and to the Senate as a part of the treaty-making power of the country brought response from United States Senator David I. Walsh. Introduced as one to whom the Irish cause was entrusted, the junior Senator from Massachusetts asked Mr. de Valera to take back to Ireland the word that the Senate already was pledged to support the aspirations of the Irish people and that they could "depend upon it that the United States will never place an obstacle in the way of Irish independence."

President de Valera, on the occasion of his first appearance at a public meeting since his mysterious arrival in this country, met with a rousing welcome. His voice, with a bit of brogue, notwithstanding his birth in this country, fell far short of carrying to the outer lines of the throng which strained to hear him. The speaking platform, placed over the home plate of the baseball diamond, appeared at times in danger of collapse under the crush of the thousands who surged out of the stands and carried press tables and all police arrangements with them. Several women fainted in the jam.

Many had come as marching delegations behind bands, carrying both the Stars and Stripes and the Orange, White and Green of the "Irish Republic." Heads were bared as Old Glory passed and remained so until the Irish tricolor had gone on.

The Rev. Philip J. O'Donnell, rector of St. James's Catholic Church, before offering prayer, said he was directed to bring the best wishes and the greetings of Cardinal O'Connell. A letter was read from Governor Coolidge, who is out of the city and under a doctor's care, in which he said he believed that it was the duty of America, "lawfully and with order, to advocate the fundamental doctrine of this country, that all men should be free." Mr. de Valera, he said, would find especially strong in Massachusetts the desire for the freedom of his land.

Mayor Peters extended the good wishes of the city and expressed "confidence that you will guide to a successful solution the difficult problem of the Irish people."

Mr. de Valera prefaced his prepared address with a statement of his faith in entrusting Ireland's case to the American people.

"I do not fear for a moment," he said, "that America will make a shuttlecock of our affairs. I know your people are united on the question of liberty, and it was a sweet to my ears to hear Ireland's cause pleaded by Americans like Senator Walsh and Major Kincaid, formerly Representative Eugene Kincaid of New Jersey."

Mr. de Valera said it was a coincidence that on the day that President Wilson, speaking in Boston on his return from France three months ago, said: "America is the hope of the world," he used the identical words in an interview with an American reporter who found him in London when British detectives were unable to do so. Amplifying these words today, he said it was America's opportunity now to take action that would be "as great a landmark in the history of progress and civilization as were the events of 1776."

"We in Ireland clearly recognize," he continued, "that if the wrong turning be now taken, if violence be re-established in its former supremacy, humanity is faced with a period of misery for which history has no parallel and with a series of irregular conflicts vastly more terrible than the haggled conflict now ended.

"Peace was nominally signed between the two great combating sides yesterday. Peace—peace that give us twenty new wars instead of the one that it nominally ends.

"Does it not already seem a mockery—and a mockery it will remain, unless America takes up the responsibility for the moral leadership of the world, to which her consistent traditions, no less than the alms she set herself in entering this war, entitle her.

"The present opportunity is never likely to recur. The idea of a community of nations, recognizing a common law and a common right, ending war among nations as municipal law has ended private war among individuals, is today a possibility. If America does what the people of the world pray and expect America will do. To lose this moment would be a disaster that it would be impossible to repair.

"If America disappoints, then the right-minded, the good, the just in the world will be thrown back to a cynical and sullen despair. Democracy dies or else goes mad.

"A new 'holy alliance' cannot save democracy. A just League of Nations, founded on the only basis on which it can be just—the equality of right among nations, small no less than great—can. America can see to it that such a League is set up and set up now. She is strong enough to do so and it is her right, in consequence of the explicit terms on which she entered the war. She will be backed up by the right minded of the whole world, by all but perhaps the scheming diplomats or the financial interests that back them.

"Ireland offers herself unreservedly in that case. A League of Nations and a covenant for a League of Nations can be framed in Washington as well as in Paris. Now is the time to frame it—it is not enough to destroy, you must build."

Senator Walsh in his address referred to Mr. de Valera as "The Lincoln of Ireland," and said he would "take the shackles off Irishmen."

"If England will do for Ireland what America did for the Cuban Republic, the Irishman will grasp the proffered hand of friendship," said Major Kincaid. "But if England refuses, and offers the mailed fist, Irish manhood, under the leadership of de Valera, will fight."

Resolutions, offered by ex-Congressman Joseph F. O'Connell and adopted with a cheer, thanked the Senate for "instructing the American delegates at Paris to bring the case of Ireland to the Peace Conference," declared "unreservedly in favor of the independence of Ireland," and demanded that our Government recognize the Irish Republic."

The resolutions added that "we register opposition to any League of Nations which does not protect all American rights and ideals and which binds us to guarantee the territorial integrity of the British and Japanese empires."

FAVORS FREE IRELAND.

Archbishop Hayes Writes in Approval of His Race's Ambition.

In a letter to the Rev. Francis P. Duffy, former chaplain of the 165th Infantry, Archbishop Patrick J. Hayes yesterday expressed his approval of the movement for a free Ireland. The letter was in reply to an invitation to discuss the Irish question at a meeting of the New York Chapter of the Rainbow Division Veterans to be held tonight in the Sixty-ninth Regiment Armory, Lexington Avenue and Twenty-sixth Street. After saying that he would be unable to attend because of the annual retreat of the Catholic clergy at Mount St. Vincent's, Archbishop Hayes wrote in part:

"The Irish sword, which has been drawn the world over for the cause of liberty, has once more borne a noble part in the defence of the weak. Many lands you have helped to that state, though not yet, alas! the one in which, after America, you, as I myself, are most deeply interested.

"But the end, I hope and believe, is not yet. Our President has laid down the principle of self-determination for all peoples; both houses of Congress, following the fine American tradition of supporting the oppressed, have declared by overwhelming majorities their sympathy with the aspirations of the Irish people.

"The voice of men like yourselves, of hundreds of thousands, nay, of millions of men of the Irish race, who have so amply manifested their thorough devotion to our Republic by taking up arms without any consideration except the interests of this country, will be heard with assent by our fellow citizens of every racial origin, and the united voice of America will be heard across the seas as it utters the demand that the land of our fathers should not remain the only country in all Europe to be excluded from the right of self-determination."

Archbishop Hayes, in addition to paying tribute to the regiment, commended in high terms the work of Major Duffy. He enclosed his personal check for $500 for the regimental welfare fund.

Dr. Patrick McCartan, "Envoy" of the Irish republic to the United States, was uncommunicative yesterday in the absence of Professor de Valera in Boston, where he was scheduled to speak. Dr. McCartan said he thought that Dr. de Valera would be back at the headquarters in the Waldorf-Astoria tomorrow morning.

Brandon Tynan, the actor, who is Chairman of the Friends of Irish Freedom Committee in charge of de Valera's New York City itinerary, said yesterday that a rally would be held at noon today on the steps of the Public Library in the interest of the Irish Victory Fund. Major Duffy, Alfred W. McCann, and Lindsay Crawford will speak. Mr. Crawford was formerly editor of the Ulster Guardian of Belfast, and is now editor of the Canadian Statesman. He was the founder and first Grand Master of the Independent Order of Orangemen. The regimental band of the 69th Infantry will render selections of Irish melodies. John Finnegan, tenor of St. Patrick's Cathedral, and Miss Lily Meagher will sing.

At the same time a rally will be held at the Sub-Treasury. The Irish Pipers' Club will parade in ancient Irish costume and skirl Gaelic tunes. Several busses of wounded 165th Regiment veterans will also be there with Eileen Huban, Peggy O'Neill, Norma Thomas, and Marion Coakley. Officers of the regiment, including Majors Meany and Kelly, will be among the speakers.

LAUD PLUNKETT'S SCHEME.

British Press See Irish Solution in Dominion League Plan.

LONDON, June 29.—Commenting on the formation of "the Irish Dominion League" and its plan for home rule in Ireland on colonial lines, The Manchester Guardian says Sir Horace Plunkett's scheme may have a long and hard battle before it, but has a good cause and wise, experienced leaders. It holds out better hope for Ireland than has existed for many a day, The Guardian believes.

Sir Horace Plunkett, interviewed by The Sunday Observer, said it was certain that the present régime, with its army of occupation, tanks, and machine guns, could not go on. The question was what could be put in its place, and the supporters of the Irish Dominion League, he said, believed that their plan, with necessary adjustments demanded by geographical and other considerations, to be the solution of the Irish question. The Star describes the scheme as a political event of capital moment.

LOOKS FOR A NEW GERMANY

Argentine Officer Says People Are Going to Work.

BUENOS AIRES, June 29.—Lieut. Col. Kankelin of the Argentine Navy, who was unable to leave Germany during the war, arrived here recently from Amsterdam.

"New Germany will soon be a model republic," he said today. "A return of the old régime is impossible, for democracy is firmly established. It is impossible, however, that the present horrible conditions can last, and there must be a political move to seek a medium between the two extremes."

Only the arrival in Munich of the forces of Gustav Noske, the Minister of Defense, prevented the socialization of women, according to the Lieutenant Colonel.

"The German people have accepted the peace terms with clenched teeth and a tired look of resignation," Lieut. Col. Kenkelin continued. "But already they are rolling up their paper sleeves to work to overcome the present condition. The defeat of the Germans and the spread of Bolshevism were both due to hunger, resulting from the blockade, and nothing else."

Indian Scout Enlists in Air Service.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, June 29.—Claude Prairie, chief of Indian scouts in the American Army, has just had his first air flight and enjoyed it so much that he immediately enlisted in the army air service and expressed a wish to become an American army pilot. In his flight he traveled from Oklahoma City to Fort Sill, Okla., a distance of 70 miles, in 67 minutes, flying at an altitude of 3,500 feet.

DR. WILKINS HANGS HIMSELF IN JAIL

theory on which the authorities are now acting is that he came into possession of the rope yesterday, probably in the afternoon, when there were many persons in the jail, the day being visitors' day. There were also a number of visitors this afternoon, but the records show that none of them registered as desiring to see Dr. Wilkins.

A few minutes before 9 o'clock tonight Coroner Walter R. Jones arrived at the jail and took charge of the investigation. Coroner Jones questioned all of the guards and other persons employed about the jail, but none could throw any light on the case. There are no windows in the cell, which overlooks the courtyard, and this fact, Coroner Jones pointed out, proved beyond doubt that the rope was brought into the jail and passed to Dr. Wilkins by some person whose identity is not, at this time, even a matter of suspicion.

"At this time," said an official at 9 o'clock tonight, "we are entirely at sea so far as the circumstances attending the smuggling of the rope are concerned. We are now going to check up all visitors who have been inside of the jail since Dr. Wilkins was convicted, and we hope before long to find some clue upon which to proceed in our efforts to identify the person who brought the rope in."

The doors of Dr. Wilkins's cell inside the iron cage, which encloses all the cells in the jail, were not locked at the time of the suicide. It was twenty minutes to 8 o'clock when the guard passed the cell the last time. Dr. Wilkins was then seated at the table. As soon as the guard had gone Dr. Wilkins walked out of the cell and down the corridor to the bathroom which is only a few yards from the cell. Five minutes later he was missed and going into the bathroom the guards found the body hanging from an iron pipe in the ceiling.

He had tied both ends of the rope together, looped the double rope over a pipe, about eight feet from the floor, making a noose large enough to pass over his head. He had stood upon the waste can while doing this. Then he kicked away the can, drawing the rope taut with such force that he broke his neck.

When found the Doctor's feet were close to the bathroom floor, but not touching it. He was unconscious and apparently dead, the keeper believed. He summoned help and took the body down, administered "first aid" when he detected a pulse, and had a call sent for physicians at the Nassau hospital.

Late tonight William Henderson, who, with John Willis, was on duty when Dr. Wilkins hanged himself made a statement.

"Acting under instructions from Sheriff Seaman," said Henderson, "Mills, the other guard who was on duty, and I had been going down to see Dr. Wilkins every ten minutes. Neither of us was stationed constantly at his cell, but the watch was especially strict during the day for the reason that today, as well as yesterday, was visitors day, and there were many people in and out of the jail, particularly in the afternoon. We kept close watch on all of these visitors to make certain that no unauthorized person got to Dr. Wilkins.

Chose Safe Time for Suicide.

"However, the fact is that somebody, either today or yesterday, did get to Dr. Wilkins and managed to put into his possession a piece of new Manila rope about six feet long. The rope was cleverly hidden in the cell by Dr. Wilkins, and we now realize that Dr. Wilkins waited until immediately after one of us had taken a look at him and his cell, and then with great speed, for one of his years, he went to the bathroom, made the rope fast to the iron pipe, adjusted the noose, climbed upon the garbage can and jumped. The garbage can is about three feet high and is the can that is usually kept in the corridor. It was put in to the bathroom because that happened to be a handy place to store it.

"With the aid of the garbage can he was able to give himself a drop of about two and a half or three feet. It was probably only a few seconds after he jumped that Mills discovered him. He called me, and we let him down. He was dangling just above the floor. He was still warm and seemed to be alive, but Dr. Cleghorn told us as soon as he had examined him that his neck was broken.

"The rope was undoubtedly smuggled to him by some one who had been hired for the purpose, and it was probably done on Saturday. I believe that he had several visitors on Saturday, and he had no visitors today, with the exception of the chaplain. It may be possible that some one who got in to visit another prisoner handed the rope to him. It might have been thrown through the bars to him.

"This act of his was a surprise, because the old man had always been cheerful and never appeared downhearted or discouraged. During the evening, a few minutes before he killed himself, he remarked to me what a fine, cool night it was."

District Attorney Weeks was one of the first of the county officials to reach the jail after the suicide was discovered. He had a talk with Sheriff Seaman, and the Sheriff told him he thought Dr. Wilkins had managed to induce some one to smuggle the rope to him. Sheriff Seaman said that while he had not kept a guard before the cell all the time, he had, nevertheless, maintained an unusually strict watch, and that the guards had inspected the cell and prisoner every few minutes. Sheriff Seaman as well as District Attorney Weeks both expressed great surprise at the turn of events, and both pointed out that the demeanor of Dr. Wilkins, after his conviction, was such as to indicate that he had no intention of taking his life. Since his conviction Dr. Wilkins had on many occasions protested his innocence, and furthermore he had appeared to take great interest in the plans that were under way to appeal the case.

Dr. Wilkins spent the afternoon today reading books and writing letters, which proved to be the farewell letters found after he killed himself and which are now in the possession of Coroner Jones. At 7:40 P. M., five minutes before he killed himself, Dr. Wilkins was seen at his table writing his last letter.

Charles N. Wysong of Fort Washington, who was chief counsel for Dr. Wilkins at his trial, came to Mineola tonight as soon as he was notified of his client's death.

"I have always believed in the innocence of Dr. Wilkins," said Mr. Wysong, "and now I am more convinced than ever that he did not murder his wife. No guilty man could go to his death protesting his innocence as he does in these letters. No one seems to know where he got the rope. I saw him searched, and it was done thoroughly. The rope was not entirely new, but practically new. It might have come from around a suitcase."

Mr. Wysong said that in the pocket of Dr. Wilkins was found the sheet of his bed which had been torn into lengths and made into rope. This, he said, gives the appearance that the doctor intended to use the sheet to hang himself before he came in possession of the rope.

"I shall always believe in his innocence. I was prepared to file my notice of appeal on Tuesday, and was going to take it to the Governor if necessary."

Mr. Wysong was asked: "Did Dr. Wilkins ever say anything to you to lead you to believe that he might take his life?"

"I fully anticipated it," he replied. "He told me that when he went to Baltimore he was prepared to write to an undertaker to take charge of his body and have it cremated. Dr. Wilkins said he was going to send the undertaker $50 for his trouble. He then told me that he decided not to kill himself because he did not want to die under a cloud. I thought Dr. Wilkins might destroy himself if he got the opportunity, but I never dreamed he would get the opportunity."

When Mrs. Wilkins was murdered at Long Beach Feb. 27, last,—she was beaten to death—Dr. Wilkins was not at first suspected of the murder. His story of an attack on Mrs. Wilkins by burglars was at first accepted, and a hunt for the burglars started, but when nothing could be found to support this theory the physician's account of the crime was sifted a little more closely. Under further questioning, his story took on many variations, according to the police.

Dr. Wilkins was not arrested, the authorities confiding in a promise said to have been obtained from him by District Attorney Weeks not to run away. Dr. Wilkins, however, disappeared. A country-wide search for him started. By shaving his whiskers and using an assumed name, he escaped detection in Baltimore, where he went from New York, but about a week after his departure he returned voluntarily to this city and was arrested at the Pennsylvania Station.

The suicide of Dr. Wilkins is not the first in the Nassau County Jail. Frank Holt, a former instructor in German at Cornell University, who shot J. P. Morgan on July 4, 1915, committed suicide in his cell there on July 7, by plunging from the top of the outside of a cell door headforemost to the concrete floor of the corridor, about twenty feet below. Holt slipped out of his cell when Watchman Jerry Ryan, who had been assigned to stay constantly with him in his cell, walked out of the cell to investigate a noise made by other prisoners, and left the cell door open behind him. The cell bars were used by Holt as rungs of a ladder to climb to the top of the door. Ryan asserted that he was only fifteen feet away when Holt killed himself, and that he heard an explosion. As he groped along the dark corridor he found Holt on the ground floor of the jail. Ryan's insistence that there was an explosion caused the theory to be accepted that Holt had made away with himself by exploding between his teeth a fulminate of mercury cap. Holt's body was then removed to Cornell's morgue at Hempstead, L. I., where an autopsy was performed and the conclusion was reached that Holt's plunge to the concrete floor had killed him.

Holt's skull was cracked from the middle through to the forehead and to the base. The explanation of the explosion, according to the warden of the jail, was that in falling Holt had loosened two boards from the top of his cell, which fell when he did and made a loud report.

Holt's death revealed that he was Erich Muenter, the former Harvard instructor, who murdered his wife by poison in Cambridge in 1906.

REID LAUDS CHINA FOR REFUSING TO SIGN

Voices Admiration for Delegates Who Would Not Approve Treaty, Which He Says Breeds Revolution.

CALLS PROMISES INSINCERE

Chinese, Ignorant of Political Manoeuvrings, Think Western Diplomats Have Treated Them Unfairly, He Says.

Admiration for the Chinese delegates who refused to sign the Peace Treaty was voiced last night by Dr. Gilbert Reid of Shanghai, China, in an address at the Fort George Presbyterian Church, St. Nicholas Avenue and 186th St.

"Many are rejoicing today that the treaty of peace has been signed," said Dr. Reid. "I regret it, for the treaty breeds discontent, jealousies, and revolution, if not war. Some laugh at the Chinese delegates for staying out. I admire them as showing for once the courage of conviction and true patriotism.

"As a diplomatist, Woodrow Wilson may sign the treaty of Versailles, and as politicians the Senate may ratify it, but as a Christian, or even as a Confucian moralist, I can give no countenance to the treaty and the League of Nations as they are. The way China's rights have been thrust aside and wrong principle and precedent into the treaty to satisfy the military ambitions of Japan, an open act of condoning militarism, is enough to cause the seeker after truth to hesitate and the lover of justice to be indignant.

"A bad impression is being made on the 400,000,000 Chinese. They find Western promises, and especially American, empty words, and all our congratulations at the time China entered the war insincere and deceptive. The Chinese find that they are being deluded, hoodwinked, played with, and shuffled about. The Chinese delegates at Versailles are holding on for dear life to the skirts of the Big Five and wonder whereunto all this will lead.

"What is needed is simple justice, simple fair play, and on this, as on every matter of principle, there can be no compromise. If compromise comes, it means that war will return. It means more, that the cause of Christianity, that pure and undefiled religion, common to all peoples, is attacked and shamed in the home of its friends."

DANZIG GERMANS IN GLOOM.

Anxiously Await the Naming of a Commissioner.

Copyright, 1919, by The Chicago Tribune Co.

DANZIG, June 27, (via Copenhagen, June 29.)—Danzig with its 200,000 people presents a gloomy appearance today.

The Germans meeting in the beer gardens sullenly, dumbly maintain that "Danzig German must remain German." They are displeased because President Wilson is reported to be sending marines to Schleswig.

They are awaiting an appointment by the League of Nations in the next fifteen days of a high commission which will decide the Eastern Germany boundaries.

Count Harodyski, Polish, says: "This is the first time any nation ever kept its promise to Poland," and thinks of America.

TELLS OF HARDSHIPS SUFFERED BY JEWS

Miss Hetty Goldman Reports on Serious Conditions in Rumania and Bulgaria.

MANY DYING IN BUCHAREST

Industry and Transportation Disorganized—The Rich Pay and the Poor Suffer.

A report of starvation and destitution among the Jews of Rumania, Bulgaria, Greece and Serbia, made by Miss Hetty Goldman, an agent of the Joint Distribution Committee of the American Funds for Jewish War Sufferers, was made public yesterday by Felix M. Warburg, chairman of the Joint Distribution Committee.

Miss Goldman went to the Balkan countries as a special commissioner to extend aid to the suffering Jews of those countries. She said there was serious suffering in Rumania, with conditions in Bulgaria somewhat better, although Bulgarian Jews face the task of caring for the Rumanian refugees. Speaking of conditions in Bulgaria, Miss Goldman said:

"At Sofia I found sixty of these people living in one room, among them about a half dozen women. They were discouraged and sullen, and I am told that in their long hours of idleness they even quarrel and come to blows. It was a most distressing picture. These people had left Rumania for the most part, not as mere deserters, but after having completed their military service, and because they were unable to find employment. Skilled workmen who had held positions for twelve years were told by their Rumanian employers that as Jews they could never get their places back. They had then left the country with the hope of going on immediately to Palestine."

Passing on to conditions in Rumania, where she visited Bucharest, Jassy, Kishineff, Galatz and Braila, Miss Goldman said.

"I was very painfully impressed by the number of sick people I saw all over Rumania, and the statistics of the burial societies carry out this impression. In Bucharest out of a Jewish population of about 45,000 there was in the winter an average of eight funerals a day, or, if the same rate is maintained during the summer, 65 deaths per thousand of the population during the year. A large percentage of the typhus cases here and in Jassy has also been among the Jews.

"I think it is probably fair to say that while the greatest suffering is on the part of the peasants in remote towns, which are not only beginning to be reached by the American Food Commission and where people were until recently actually dying of starvation, the greatest amount of suffering in the cities is among the poor Jewish population. A great many, of course, of the small merchant class and of the large dealers in grain and other commodities have enriched themselves, but the people who never made more than a small living and the salaried employes are in an almost desperate situation. The Jews can get materials, particularly raw materials, only with the greatest difficulty, and in consequence, the artisans—tailors, tinsmiths, shoemakers, &c.—are at present idle. It is difficult, of course, to estimate how long present conditions will last, but every one with whom I have talked—Americans working with the Food Commission and the Red Cross, Jewish merchants, and financiers—agrees that there will be no substantial reduction in prices for some time to come. The people who have enriched themselves during the war are willing to pay, and the merchants, of course, as long as they can sell their goods, will not tolerate a reduction in prices. The Rumanian Government has several times tried to fix prices, with the result that all goods have immediately disappeared from the market."

POGROM DAY IN BRITAIN.

Indignation Over Polish Massacres Expressed at London Demonstrations.

Details of the observance in Great Britain last Thursday of Pogrom Day were received yesterday by the Zionist Organization of America. The day was devoted to fasting and prayer.

The greatest demonstrations were in London and began with large meetings in the theatres. Among those who addressed the meetings were Israel Zangwill, H. N. Brailsford, Commander Kenworthy, M. P., and Dr. Schmarya Levin. After prayers for the dead were said the assemblages adopted resolutions expressing indignation over the massacres in Poland.

Letters from Sir Robert Cecil and Sydney Webb were read. Sir Robert expressed the hope that the Peace Treaty would safeguard the rights of the Jews of Europe. At the conclusion of the demonstrations, great parades were held in which it was said more than 100,000 participated. The parades were led by discharged Jewish soldiers.

RUSH JEWISH RELIEF FUND.

New Yorkers Speak at Meeting of Illinois Workers.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, ILL., June 29.—Delegates from thirty-five cities in Illinois, meeting today under the presidency of Julius Rosenwald, developed plans whereby Illinois will be asked to subscribe $1,500,000 toward a fund of $35,000,000 which is being raised for relief work among the Jewish war sufferers in Europe. Chicago's quota, previously fixed at $1,250,000, has already been subscribed, Mr. Rosenwald having given $200,000 of the amount.

The meeting was held under the direction of H. H. Lévor of New York, a member of the American Jewish Relief Committee. One of the speakers was Dr. Nathan Krass of the Central Synagogue, New York, who will leave for Poland next Wednesday to investigate privations of the Jewish people there. He was appointed to the Poland Commission by President Wilson.

"We can begin once more," said Dr. Krass, "to help bind the wounds of the sick, to give bread to the hungry, clothing to the needy, to dig down in the earth and draw forth the metal and stone to build once more homes for the homeless.

"Recently, a member of our commission to Warsaw walked into a store and paid $1 for a slice of fish, but when he saw the long line of starving children, he could not eat, so ghastly was their appearance. In one hospital this Commissioner found three absolutely naked patients on one cot, waiting to die, without bedding, linens, or medicine."

PLANS FOR BIG ORPHANAGE.

Hebrew Society Buys Odd Fellows' Home Property in Yonkers.

The property occupied by the German Odd Fellows' Home in Tuckahoe Road, Yonkers, has been bought by the Hebrew National Orphan House, now at 52 St. Mark's Place. The property consists of nineteen and a half acres, and the main building is 150 by 160 feet. The price paid for it was $400,000. It is the intention, according to an announcement made by Leo Learner, President of the Orphan House, to establish a cottage system, and to build at once 500 cottages for the accommodation of 2,000 orphans.

The institution is to be national in its scope and farming and trade schools are to be established under the supervision of Dr. Ludwig Bernstein, formerly with the Hebrew Sheltering Guardian Society.

WANTS FERRY KEPT OPEN.

Dugan Gives Reasons Why Astoria Route Is Much Needed.

Reasons why the Astoria Ferry, plying between Ninety-second Street and Astoria Avenue, Queens, should be reopened are set forth in a brief, prepared by Michael F. Dugan for the information of the Board of Estimate. During a fifty-four hour period in December, 1913, he says, after the opening of the Queensboro Bridge, 6,447 vehicles used the ferry. The Harlem Market is the distributing centre for farm produce between Fifty-ninth Street and the upper Bronx, and in the regular market season from 250 to 300 farm trucks bring their produce to this market daily, 70 per cent. of which comes from Long Island via the Astoria Ferry. Should this ferry be abandoned this produce would be deflected to the Wallabout Market, Brooklyn, producing an unequal distribution of food products, which would result in increased cost to the people.

"In 1915," says the brief, "there were only sixteen cities in the United States with a population larger than the Borough of Queens. Long Island City, which has just begun to develop, is conceded to be the largest industrial centre in the United States."

It is stated in the brief that unless proper transportation is afforded this industrial growth will be seriously retarded. It is said that the traffic on the Queensboro Bridge has increased tremendously since its opening and that it has almost reached its vehicular capacity.

DROPPED BABIES 3 STORIES

Men Saved Children in Jersey City Tenement Fire.

Five children were dropped by their relatives from windows of their homes at 263 and 265 Grand Street, Jersey City, during a fire last night, and all were caught and saved from harm by men in the street. Mrs. Nellie Cirselsky dropped her baby from the second floor, and then climbed out of the window. She fractured her ankle in her leap and was taken to a hospital.

Oricuaky and Morris Silverman of 316 Grand Street caught four children who were dropped from the third floor at 265. All the children were under 9 years. The fire started under a rear porch and spread to the halls and stairs in the two frame buildings before any of the occupants were aware of the danger. When the firemen arrived the flames had reached the roof.

SCOTS OPEN 'CANADA WEEK'

Celebrate at Anderson Galleries with National Music and Dances.

The opening of "Canada Week" was celebrated yesterday with Scottish songs and dances, in the Anderson Galleries, Fifty-ninth Street and Park Avenue, which had been turned over for the day to the Scottish residents, by the Canadian War Painting Exhibition. More than 1,000 participated in the celebration. The exercises were under the direction of Charles Turnbull, Deputy Royal Chief of Clan Mackenzie, Clan McDuff and Clan Graham; and Captain J. M. Stewart of Company C, New York Scottish Regiment.

Scottish dances were given by Murdo Elder, a famous Scottish dancer. The music for his dancing was furnished by his brother, James Murdo. Hector A. Smith, Brooklyn baritone, sang Scottish airs and war songs. Moving pictures of the capture of Vimy Ridge were also shown and the Livatt Pipe Band played familiar airs.

ARCTIC EXPLORER INDICTED

Captain Suzanne Cruel to His Child, Alleges Her Stepmother.

Special to The New York Times.

HAVERSTRAW, June 29.—An indictment charging cruelty to his 14-year-old daughter Isabel has been handed down by the Orange County Grand Jury against Captain Jacques Suzanne, Arctic explorer and moving picture producer of Highland Falls.

Suzanne startled New York a few years ago by driving a caravan of sleds, drawn by Eskimo dogs, up Fifth Avenue on the first lap of a journey to the Arctic. He is a veteran of the French Army. His second wife, formerly Helen de Seife, a stage musician, made the complaint against Suzanne, who has a mountain lodge in Highland Falls, where he keeps animals of the arctic regions. It is alleged that he overworked the girl, a daughter by his first wife, and struck her with a club. He is under $1,000 bail. He says the charge is the result of a family disagreement.

OYSTER BAY TO GREET SONS

July 4 Will Be Celebrated as Welcome Home Day to Service Men.

Special to The New York Times.

OYSTER BAY, L. I., June 29.—Next Friday, July 4, will be celebrated here as "Welcome Home" Day for the 507 men who were in the service of the United States during the war. Lieut. Col. Roosevelt will lead the parade, and will make the principal address when the soldiers and sailors gather in the park which was made famous by his father. Frederic R. Coudert, the lawyer, will present medals to the boys.

Following the parade, the soldiers will march to the home of J. C. Moore, where a dinner will be served on the lawn. In the early evening the soldiers will march to the grave of Colonel Theodore Roosevelt, where services will be held and a wreath will be placed on the grave.

Today more than 3,000 people visited the grave of the former President. Wildflowers gathered by the throng were strewn on the grave, and at nightfall it was covered.

One Million Five Hundred Thousand Pounds of Powder for the Feet.

That is what the government sent last year to make the soldiers' and sailors' feet comfortable and fit for the kind of war they fought and finished.

In Peace and War for over 25 years Allen's Foot-Ease, the Antiseptic Healing Powder for the Feet, to be shaken into the shoes and sprinkled in the foot-bath, has been the standard remedy for all aching, swollen, hot, tired feet, blisters and sore spots and for the instant relief of corns, bunions and callouses.

Thousands of people sent packages of Allen's Foot-Ease to their sons, brothers or sweethearts in the army and navy because they knew from experience that it would freshen and rest their feet, make their shoes comfortable and walking easy. Those who use Allen's Foot-Ease have solved their foot troubles.

THANKS FOR PEACE VOICED IN CHURCHES

Congregations Throughout City in Prayers of Gratitude Hail Ending of War.

SEE DIVINE RETRIBUTION

Ministers Declare Injustice of Cause Doomed Germany to Defeat—Praise for League.

Comments on the signing of the Peace Treaty were voiced from some of the pulpits of the city's churches yesterday. Dr. William P. Merrill, pastor of the Brick Presbyterian Church, said that the treaty sealed the verdict rendered against Germany by the Allies, who proved to her that "the way of the transgressor is hard.

"Differ as we may upon the details of the treaty, the basic fact about it is that it breaks the power of a nation that defied the moral opinion of the world," he said. "It is a fearful price that the world has had to pay. Germany cries out at the enormous bill for reparations she is forced to pay and no one can wonder at her protests. We might heed them and call the bill unjust if it left her enemies free from debt and prosperous.

"But the great nations that fought against Germany must bear for many years a staggering load of indebtedness even after Germany has paid her utmost by way of reparation. We should remember that Germany chose to attack rather than to wait for processes of justice and conciliation. It is simple justice that her unharmed territory should bear the heavier burden of reconstruction and that she be forced to pay all she can to set on their feet again the nations that were made to bear the brunt of the war."

Praise for the Fallen.

At Trinity Church Dr. William T. Manning referred to the signing of the treaty in these words:

"All of us give thanks for the signing of the peace terms and for the official ending of the war. We give thanks to God for victory granted to the cause of righteousness and for deliverance from peril greater than any of us have fully realized. We thank Him for the noble spirit of our men in the service on land and sea and of our whole people when the great call came to them, and here, in this church, we think especially of the 910 men who went into the fighting service from Trinity parish, 28 of whom laid down their lives in the struggle.

"We pray that the peace now agreed upon may prove lasting. May the terms now accepted be faithfully and honorably fulfilled. As great as have been the crimes of those who brought on this war, tragic as are its consequences, may we and all men now devote ourselves to the task of healing the deep wounds, of meeting the great problems, and of making the world a better and a far more Christian place than it has ever been."

Dr. Leighton Parks, rector of St. Bartholomew's, said that the war came to an end when the armistice was signed but peace was not assured until the Germans signed the treaty. Speaking of the League of Nations, he said:

"There are three classes of men who fondly hope it may be defeated—the intense partisans, who expect political advantage from its rejection; the men and women of Bolshevist sympathies, who would rather have a devastating war continue, hoping that thereby anarchy may ensue, rather than a democratic peace, and the Junker party and their few admirers in this country. The constitution of the League of Nations may be improved by amendments, but those amendments must be enacted by the League itself. To reject it because it does not in all respects satisfy its critics would be as foolish as it would have been to have refused to ratify the Federal Constitution, though that unquestionably needed to be amended.

"Let us pray for patience—patience with an adversary who, because he is devoid of a sense of humor, has lately done, and will no doubt again do, silly things which irritate us, and who, because he lacks a high sense of honor, must be watched, lest he prove treacherous.

La Guardia Discusses League.

Congressman F. H. La Guardia spoke on the League of Nations yesterday at the West End Methodist Church.

"If Article X. were not included in the covenant the very persons who are clamoring against it now would demand to have it in," he said. "It does not require that members of the League assist in internal matters. It is simply designed to prevent a repetition of the Belgian outrages and such outrageous terms as submitted by Austria-Hungary to Serbia.

"This is not a personal question, and not a political question, but a national question. The drafting into service of the best legal talent to complicate and confuse the issue will not prevent the American people from getting an intelligent understanding of the real purpose of this league as expressed in the agreement. The theory is nothing new. It is what we have been striving to get for many years, compulsory arbitration before a declaration of war. Give the people of any country time to consider a question of war and I tell you that, so long as the last war remains in the memory of man, we will not have another world war."

NO JAZZ AT COMMUNION.

Pastor Omits Vaudeville at Children's Baptismal Service.

The Rev. Charles Nelson, pastor of Grace Chapel of the United Christian Church of America, Prospect Street, Long Island City, who is promoting Sunday baseball and who a week ago introduced jazz music and a theatre program at his services, omitted the unusual features from his program last evening because the service was for the celebration of communion and the baptism of children.

"The services tonight would not lend themselves to extra adornment," said Mr. Nelson before the services. "When children are presented at the altar for baptism you are always sure to have the parents and relatives and, of course, that brings your congregation. You cannot introduce any outside matter into a communion service, and I did not plan any. But I have my program made out for future Sunday evenings. I am not going to tell you what it is, except to say that the features for the future will be fully as interesting as those we have had. I want to keep the people guessing as to what they are to see and hear and then they will come to my services to find out."

JAILED ON SEDITION CHARGE.

First Arrests of Bolsheviki at Scranton Under New Law.

SCRANTON, Penn., June 29.—The first arrests under the Pennsylvania anti-sedition law signed by Governor William C. Sproul were made here tonight by city police and State troopers, assisted by agents of the Department of Justice.

Joseph Jukelis, 42 years old, a pianomaker of New York City, a member of the Executive Committee of the Lithuanian Socialist Federation, the principal speaker at a Bolshevist meeting, was arrested by Lona B. Day, Supreintendent of Police, charged with making seditious remarks.

Others arrested at the meeting were distributing literature which the police said was of a seditious character. The Socialist Federation, in which Jukelis claimed membership, was recently expelled from the American Socialist Party for its radical tendencies.

PESSOA TOURS IN CANADA.

Visits Ottawa and Montreal, and Then Starts for Boston.

MONTREAL, June 29.—An important step toward establishment of direct trade relations between Canada and Brazil will be taken if the forty-eight German ships interned in Brazilian harbors are retained by that government, says Pessoa, President-elect of the South American republic, on his arrival today from Ottawa.

Dr. Pessoa was speaking at a luncheon given in his honor by the city at the Montreal Hunt Club.

After inspecting Montreal's waterfront and grain elevators, Dr. Pessoa left for Boston tonight.

OTTAWA, June 29.—Desire for closer commercial, industrial, social, and educational relations between his country and Canada were expressed by Dr. Pessoa in a statement made public today before he left for Montreal. The President urged that Portuguese be taught in the schools of the United States and Canada in order to promote relationship with Brazil. He pointed out that not only would a knowledge of Portuguese strengthen social connections with the South American republic, but that it could also be of great service to Canadian exporters desiring to engage in trade with that country.

Dr. Epitacio Pessoa, President-elect of Brazil, with his wife and daughter will return this afternoon from Canada, where he has been visiting. Upon his arrival at the Grand Central Dr. Pessoa will go directly to his suite in the Waldorf-Astoria.

It was said last night that Dr. Pessoa's plans for the next few days in New York had not been definitely determined. It was announced, however, that tonight he and his family would attend the performance of "Three Wise Fools" at the Criterion Theatre. The theatre has been specially decorated for the occasion.

SELL ARMY CARS AT PROFIT.

High Prices for Our Motor Transport Obtained in England.

LONDON, June 5.—(Correspondence of the Associated Press.)—American army motor transport in England has not cost the United States Government anything for machines, according to figures prepared at army headquarters here. Astonishing prices have been paid here for machines the army has placed on auction, touring cars in scores of instances bringing more than the original cost, even though they had seen rather hard usuage for months.

The army purchased a number of cars of a light popular type for $450 each, and these have sold for as high as $1,000 after being used eight months. Another machine the average purchasing price for which was $1,085 has brought as much as $1,690 at the auction sales. The prices bid for touring cars have been absolutely amazing, said Major J. C. Weller, head of the motor transport work in the quartermaster department here, a great deal higher than we would have dared asked on straight sales.

Altogether the army had 592 touring cars, trucks, ambulances, motorcycles, and bicycles for its work of transporting about 1,000,000 men through England. Only a dozen of these have been reserved to be used in the final clearing out of headquarters in London. Good prices have been obtained for the trucks and ambulances, exceptionally good prices when compared with what second-hand motors bring in the United States, but the greatest demand has been for the touring cars, motorcycles, and bicycles.

England never did build such vehicles in quantity and during the war none were built for private use. Now the demand is so great that actual values have been almost discarded entirely.

BULLETIN No. 4

Increased Housing Facilities for New York's New Telephone Plant

THREE new Central Office buildings, additions to eight existing Central Office buildings, representing an expenditure of three and one-quarter million dollars and providing 390,000 more square feet of floor space—these figures, even though they concern only housing equipment, give some idea of the immensity of the general program of work planned or under way for 1919 and designed to provide the facilities for meeting New York City's abnormal demands for service on a normal basis of quality.

Every new building or addition to an existing building will house a new or an enlarged Central Office switchboard that will shoulder part of the load of existing Central Offices and every new building or addition as it is completed will mark a big step forward in the direction of peace-time standards of service.

Providing the necessary additions to present telephone housing facilities is a big job and an important one, but it is only a part of the big program that has for its purpose the restoration to New York City as soon as the requirements of the work permit, of—

ASSAILS BOLSHEVIST REGIME IN RUSSIA

Kovalsky Says It Is as Far Removed from Freedom as the Moon Is from the Sun.

JEWS COMBAT SOVIETS

Siberian Delegate Tells of Appeals in Petrograd and Moscow to Incite Pogroms.

G. A. Kovalsky, who has just arrived in this country, from Siberia, as a delegate of the All-Siberian Co-Operative Assemblies, is the author of "An Appeal to the American Jewry," which has been made public by the Russian Information Bureau, which represents the anti-Bolshevist factions, with headquarters in the Woolworth Building. In his appeal Mr. Kovalsky declares that "the Bolshevist régime is as far removed from true freedom and true Socialism as the moon is from the sun." In this article Mr. Kovalsky quotes Trotzky as repudiating his Jewish blood. The great mass of Russian Jews, he adds, are anti-Bolshevist, and he cites various instances in Russian history, since the Bolsheviki gained control, to prove his statement.

"The fall of the monarchy of Russia," Mr. Kovalsky states, "was a genuine liberating movement, a truly popular change, and it was therefore necessarily a national movement. But the centuries of violence and lawlessness and of a studiedly bred ignorance could not pass without leaving their mark upon the people. The Russian monarchism, in conjunction with its German prototype, could produce nothing better at the time of its passing than Bolshevism, a creed much akin in spirit and in the essence of its methods to the régime of absolutism. In its own turn, the fall of Bolshevism in Russia, combined with a certain state of the popular psychology and the conditions of internecine war, may produce a series of temporary events of a highly deplorable nature and a repetition of the old methods of the Black Hundred groups.

"It must be stated that Bolshevism has, indeed, prepared the ground for these eventualities. The fates have ordained that among the principal and secondary leaders of the Bolshevist period of Russian history there are some men who belong to the Jewish nation. Trotzky, Uritzky, Zinoviev, Svedlow, Kamenev, are Jews who would not give a thought to the grave danger in which they are placing, by their experiments, the nation to which they are tied by bonds of blood. In December-January, 1917-18, representatives of the Petrograd Jewish community brought this very palpable menace to the attention of Leon Trotzky, to which he (Trotzky) replied that it was not a matter of concern to him since he was not a Jew but an internationalist.

"In consequence, the popular report, unmindful of the fact that such leaders of Bolshevism as Lenin, Krilenko, Dybenko, Kolontay, Raskolnikov, Bonch-Bruyevich, Bukharin, and others are pure Russians, and of the fact that while some Jews participate in the Bolshevist movement, the Russian Jewry, in the mass, fights against Bolshevism. Already has begun the work of the servile, dark elements, the very same persons who during the régime of the Czar were agents of the police and the secret service, who demoralized our front during the period of Kerensky, who later joined the ranks of the Red Army under Trotzky and Lenin, and are now sowing new seeds of hatred to mankind. There are already appearing on the streets of Moscow and Petrograd appeals inciting to pogroms and declaring in screaming voices that the Jews infested the land with Bolshevism.

"Citizen Jews! You all know and remember the Beilliss trial in Kiev. You cannot fail to recall that the entire intellectual class of Russia, as one man, rose against that bloody and cruel slander. The celebrated Russian writer and lover of the common people, the humanitarian, Vladimir Korolenko, with his courageous pen passionately defended the Jew, Beilliss, and Beilliss was cleared. Today this Korolenko is ending his days in hunger and illness, broken in body and spirit, and proscripted by the Bolsheviki as a cheap scribbler and a 'counter-revolutionist,' similar to the treatment accorded to the Grandmother of the Russian Revolution, Catherine Breshkovsky; to the ex-inmate of the Schlusselburg Fortress, V. S. Pankratov; to the well-known member of the 'Will of the People,' Herman Lopatin, who was driven out of the Writers' Home and who died from a broken heart; the revolutionist, Vera Zasulitch; to Vladimir Bourtzev; to Leonid Andreiev, who was compelled to flee Russia; to the writer, A. E. Kuprin, who is dying from starvation; to the Russian-Jewish writer, David Eisman; to the prominent lawyer and jurist, Vinaver, and the entire editorial staffs of the Russkoye Bogatstvo and the Russkiya Viedomosti, organs that have always fought the waves of anti-semitism.

"No, Rabbi Judah Magnes! You have erred by demanding, at the Madison Square Garden meeting, justice for Russia in the form of recognition for the Bolsheviki. A régime that has condemned such people to destruction is an unjust régime, a cruel, unwise, and man-hating régime.

"Nation of Heine, Mendelssohn and Spinoza! For the sins of a score of Bolshevist commissaries thousands of innocent brothers, sisters, and children of yours may suffer. Do you know that in Siberia, in the Ural and in non-Soviet Russia there was not a single pogrom, that the Jewish communities of Omsk, Perm, and Ekaterinburg are lending aid to the Siberian Army? That there are in the Siberian Army Jewish officers? That the mobilization of the intellectual forces in Siberia has yielded a number of Jewish citizens to the army? That at the head of the commission in charge of new elections to the Constituent Assembly there was placed that unimpeachable man and free writer, Bielorussov, members of the staff of the Russkiya Viedomosti and a friend of Vladimir G. Korolenko—called to this post by the Omsk Government?

"Remember, only an all-Russian Constituent Assembly can give our land that civil order that knows 'neither Jew nor Hellene, and where the nations that inhabit Russia will be able to live and work together.'"

AIR TRAVEL 36 YEARS AGO

Viewed as Possibility in Year 2000 by Liberal Minded.

From among the now yellow pages of a copy of THE NEW YORK TIMES of April 29, 1883, there comes to light an article in the form of a prophecy which, although delivered in a light vein, has already been fulfilled. The article deals with the possibility of aerial travel, which at that time was not even seriously thought about—indeed, the writer of the now time-worn article was liberal enough to look forward to the year 2000 when the perfection of some mode of aerial travel might be accomplished. He then vividly describes the new transformation, as airships of various sizes and shapes sail overhead. Excerpts from his article follow:

"A previsionary peep at the year 2000 can scarcely be taken without providing in imagination for the probable perfection of some mode of aerial travel. As inevitably as blossom follows bud, the blind crudities of balloon and airship will be followed by some simple and practical plan of aerial navigation. The Engineer (London) argued that no agent of propulsion for air carriages has yet made its appearance. Steam is excluded, because water, coal, and engine are too heavy for aeronautical purposes; electricity, because the wires operating the motor must be connected with some source of energy on the surface. Hence, argues The Engineer, man is eternally tied to the earth."

"Will the time ever come when the air carriage will be adopted for popular use? Imagine the transformation. Landing places would have to be provided upon the roofs of our large buildings, and at given hours during the day the air above our heads would be alive with gayly painted cars, fashioned in the shapes of birds of various species and decorated in imitation of plumage. Now and then one of these birds is seen rising from the roof of a distant building, to float away into the blue ether upon a journey of fifty miles, perhaps, to the home of its occupant, in the open country. Anon one of these wonderful birds descends upon a distant roof and alights. Every newspaper office possesses among the equipments of its news department half a dozen or a dozen of these aerial cars, ready to carry reporters upon their expeditions to scenes of accident or disaster. Pleasure cars capable of carrying a dozen or a hundred passengers wing their way across the distant azure of the sky of a sunny afternoon. In a word, humanity has become a being of two worlds. Strains of music drop from passing pleasure boats in the dim twilight like notes out of heaven; laughter comes trickling down in bubbles from the upper air; sweet voices are heard above our heads.

"Now, strange, absurd, and impracticable as it all seems, there is no real reason why the problems of aerial navigation should not be as thoroughly mastered within the next fifty years as those of ocean navigation now are. The elements of a practicable airship all exist in the resources of modern invention; the only thing required is to put them together and produce the perfected structure. It is mere reverie, perhaps, to imagine that man will ever become a winged animal, but there is no insuperable scientific difficulty in the way of practically navigating the atmosphere, nor need it be supposed that fatal accident or disaster would be more frequent than it is in surface travel. Man is only tied to earth by his own terror, not by any invincible obstacles to rising above it."

The marvelous achievements of these so-called "air carriages," especially during the last few years, were undreamed of thirty-six years ago. They have played their part in the war, the Atlantic Ocean has been crossed without a stop; rivers, seas, mountains, and deserts have been crossed; we have aerial delivery and passenger service, and about the only fields left to be conquered by the airplane are the north and south poles. And by the time the year 2000 rolls around, perhaps the housing situation of the country in general, and New York in particular, will have been practically solved through the inauguration of direct aerial commutation from the planets to the earth.

STOPS RUNAWAY AT BRIDGE

Horse Traveled from Highbridge to West Forty-seventh Street Pier.

From the suburbs of the Bronx to the West Side of Manhattan, was the trip taken last night by a horse drawing a buggy, whose owner was left in a friend's home in the Highbridge Section. The last dash of the horse was made through West Forty-seventh Street toward the North River, being stopped by Patrolman James Dermody of the West Forty-seventh Street Station, just before the animal would have plunged into the water.

Shortly after 6 o'clock last night, Frank Sherman of 263 West 127th Street left his horse and buggy on a street at Highbridge, the Bronx. When he looked for them an hour later they were gone and he reported his loss to the policeof the Highbridge Station.

Patrolman Dermody was standing at Forty-seventh Street and Eleventh Avenue at midnight when he saw a driverless horse drawing a buggy washing toward him from Tenth Avenue, where it narrowly missed being struck by a freight train. Dermody swung unto the rear of the buggy as it passed, climbed to the seat and brought the horse to a stop at the end of the pier.

PROHIBITION UP TO ATTORNEY GENERAL

mobilized before Oct. 1, at which time there would be no beer in stock and that breweries would not open for a three months' run.

Members of the House Judiciary Committee who refused to support a motion to report out a straight wartime enforcement bill which advocates of that plan declared could be passed by both houses in a day, said they were not in the least disturbed by the talk that their attitude had led to the reported refusal of many liquor establishments to shut up shop tomorrow night. Chairman Volstead said he repeatedly had called attention to the fact that there were ample laws for dealing with offenders.

Some of the outspoken opponents of prohibition, as soon as the House takes up the bill, will endeavor to have it separated and immediate consideration given the part dealing with enforcement of the wartime act. They pointed out today that this should be passed as an emergency measure, despite the statement of the Chairman of the Judiciary Committee and others that present laws are ample. The bill is put together in such a way that the separation will not require further reference to the committee.

The main fight, however, will be on the definition of intoxicating liquors, with a view to the elimination of the words "more than one-half of 1 per cent. alcohol." There will be other bills to make it 2¾ per cent., all of which, according to prohibition leaders, will be voted down because, they contend, Congress "is more than 75 per cent. dry."

Wayne B. Wheeler, general counsel for the Anti-Saloon League, in a statement tonight, objects to the clause in the prohibition enforcement bill which permits of an unlimited amount of liquor being stored in homes.

Mr. Wheeler's statement follows:

"The code reported by the Judiciary Committee has in it the main features of an effective law enforcement act. The proposed provision for an unlimited amount of liquor to be permanently stored in the home is unwise. It will turn many homes into speak-easies, because the home is exempted from the search and seizure clauses entirely unless it is in part a store or boarding house. The proposed code does not authorize the search of a house even if it is proven that liquor is sold therein. This is more liberal than State laws.

"After the normal supply of liquor in a home is exhausted, there is no good reason for permitting its possession thereafter. It cannot be manufactured or sold legally under prohibition, and if it is possessed it will be by an illegal transaction. The Supreme Court recently said the right to possess might imply the right to secure it.

"This provision should be changed so as to limit the amount of liquor possessed for the time for its possession. The provision prohibiting beverage liquors by name, and all others that contain as much as one-half of 1 per cent. alcohol by volume, is in harmony with the laws of practically all of the prohibition States.

"Several features of the bill will doubtless be changed by the House when it comes up for final passage."

CITY WILL BE WET AND DRY IN SPOTS

Some Bars to Close, Others to Keep Open After Tonight's Farewell.

Although the dot of midnight tonight will mean the dawn of a new era, according to the prohibitionists, and the end of the world, according to the anti-prohibitionists, there were indications yesterday that the city might not go totally dry as the result of a lack of machinery to enforce the wartime prohibition act.

So far as the hotel bars are concerned, all of them will go out of existence, it was said, enforcement or no enforcement, and in many of them the effervescent soda and the seductive nut sundae will be served from brand-new fountains put in operation tomorrow morning. Some of the saloons announced, hopefully, that they planned to continue in operation until ordered to close by "some recognized authority," and that their sales would not be confined to beer and light wines, either.

All hope of Presidential "clemency" being dispelled by the announcement that Mr. Wilson would not intervene until troop demobilization had been completed, the general public seemingly is planning to make a "wild night of it" this evening. Restaurants and hotels along Broadway reported large advance reservations, and the prospects are that new high marks in prices for drinks will be established. At several of the restaurants and cafés rather elaborate ceremonies will be gone through when the hands of the clock veer to 12.

In expectation that the hilarity marking the end of the alcohol dynasty may mount higher than the law allows, extra police will be on hand to guide the overboisterous ones to safety. The police, it was understood, plan to act more as guides than as arms of the law.

As to what steps are to be taken, if any are in contemplation before Congress enacts measures for enforcement, to curb those who disregard the Federal laws, no announcement was forthcoming yesterday.

In a statement issued last night, the Association Opposed to National Prohibitions, 19 West Forty-fourth Street, cited President Wilson's statement that he could not act without Congressional co-operation. The organization remarked that it was a good opportunity for "the prohibitionists in Congress to clear themselves of the charges of legislative hypocrisy by repealing all wartime legislation."

"The only honest, honorable, and reputable thing for Congress to do," continued the statement, "is to repeal wartime prohibition at once, for if it is permitted to remain on the statute books it will be known of all men that it was never intended to be legislation to meet the emergency of war, but a piece of prohibition legislation pure and simple, enacted solely for the purpose of inflicting the fanatical will of the tyrannical minority on the majority of the citizens of this country."

The indications in Brooklyn last night were that, despite the failure of President Wilson to act favorably, the borough would not become "dry" tomorrow. So far as could be learned, no orders having to do with the situation had been received from Washington by the Federal officers of the Brooklyn district. All Brooklyn saloonkeepers, excepting those who abandoned hope some time ago and arranged to go out of business tonight, said they would keep their places open until directed to close them. In most saloons, however, sales will be of beer and light wines only; although there were some hardy ones who said whisky, gin, and the rest of them would be passed over the mahogany as usual.

Some of the café men in the neighborhood of Borough Hall who have restaurants connected with their bars said they would serve light wines and beers, but only with meals. The bars, they added, would be turned into lunch counters. It was understood that the cafe proprietors who plan to disregard the law obtained legal advice before announcing their decision, and they are ready to go into court to test the legality of the law.

MILWAUKEE DEALERS HOPEFUL

Have Lage Supplies of Liquor But Expect to Get Rid of It.

Special to The New York Times.

MILWAUKEE, Wis., June 29.—There will be no tearful farewell for John Barleycorn in Milwaukee. The citizens are watching his passing with little interest, and dealers are caught with big supplies on their hands. They are confident that demobilization will be declared in time to sell their liquors before prohibition goes into effect in January. So they are viewing the future with hope.

It will do no good to have physicians write prescriptions. The State druggists in conventions decided that they would not handle wines and whiskys for medical purposes because they believed that to do so would defeat the purpose of the prohibition measure.

Judges will turn a deaf ear to pleas for divorce on grounds of drinking. Applicants must tell a different story from now on, they say, if they wish to get a hearing.

ANZACS REJECT PROHIBITION

Soldiers' Vote Gives Majority for Licenses in New Zealand.

WELLINGTON, New Zealand, June 29.—The final figures in the balloting on liquor licensing show a majority of 10,362 votes in favor of a continuance of the licenses.

The vote follows: Civilians, for continuance, 282,208; for prohibition, 248,104. Soldiers, for continuance, 31,981; for prohibition, 7,723.

ALLIES' CONVENTION FOR AIR NAVIGATION

Minimum Medical Requirements Agreed On by Five Great Powers.

FIXED AT PEACE CONFERENCE

Minimum Age for Pilots and Navigators Set at 19 Years—Rules Subject to Change.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, June 29.—An international convention setting forth the medical requirements for aerial navigation as adopted by the Aeronautical Commission of the Peace Conference at Paris was made public in Washington today. Although this international convention was adopted at Paris on April 13 and was sent to Washington several weeks ago, it was to be kept confidential until the signing of the Peace Treaty. It fixes 19 years as the minimum age for air pilots and navigators, stipulates physical and medical requirements, and provides that every candidate before obtaining a license as pilot must present himself for examination.

The requirements set forth in the convention are minimal. Each State may change the conditions as it deems fit, but these minimum requirements should be maintained, in the opinion of those who signed the convention on behalf of the five principal allied powers, the United States, Great Britain, France, Italy, and Japan. Here is the text of the international agreement:

"International medical requirements for aerial navigation.

"1. Every candidate before obtaining a license as a pilot, navigator, or engineer of aircraft engaged in public transport will present himself for examination by specially qualified men (flight surgeons) appointed by or acting under the authority of the contracting State.

"2. Medical supervision, both for the selection and the maintenance of efficiency, shall be based on the following requirements of mental and physical fitness:

"(a) Good family and personal history, with particular reference to nervous stability. Absence of any mental moral, or physical defect which will interfere with flying efficiency.

"(b) Minimum age for pilots and navigators engaged in public transport shall be nineteen (19) years.

"(c) General surgical examination: The aeronaut must neither suffer from any wound, injury or operation nor possess any abnormality, congenital or otherwise, which will interfere with the efficient and safe handling of aircraft.

"(d) General medical examination: The aeronaut must not suffer from any disease or disability which renders him liable suddenly to become incompetent in the management of aircraft. He must possess heart, lungs, kidneys, and nervous system capable of withstanding the effects of altitude and also the effects of prolonged flight.

"(e) Eye examination: The aeronaut must possess a degree of visual acuity compatible with the efficient performance of his duties. No pilot or navigator shall have more than two (2) dioptres of latent hypermetropia; muscle balance must be good and commensurate with the refraction. He must have a good field of vision in each eye and must possess normal color perception.

"(f) Ear examination: The middle ear must be healthy. The aeronaut must possess a degree of auditory acuity compatible with the efficient performance of his duties.

"(g) The vestibular mechanism must be intact and neither under hypersensitive nor hyposensitive.

"(h) Nose and throat examination: The aeronaut must possess free nasal air entry on either side and not suffer from serious acute or chronic affections of the upper respiratory tract.

"3. Each contracting State shall for the present fix its own methods of examination until the details of the tests and the minimal standard of requirements have been finally settled by the authorized medical representative of the I. C. A. N.

"4. The successful candidate will receive a medical certificate of acceptance which must be produced before the license can be issued.

"5. In order to insure maintenance of efficiency every aeronaut shall be re-examined periodically, at least every six months, and the findings attached to his original record. In case of illness or accident, also, an aeronaut shall be re-examined and pronounced fit before resuming aerial duties. The date and result of each re-examination shall be recorded on the aeronaut's flying certificate.

"6. No aeronaut who, before the date of the present convention, has given proof of his flying ability, shall, so long as he retains such ability, be necessarily disqualified because he fails to fulfill all of the above requirements.

"7. Each contracting State may raise the conditions set forth above, as it deems fit, but these minimal requirements shall be maintained internationally.

ARMY FLIER COMES TO GRIEF

Plane Damaged at Start of 1,200-Mile Flight.

WASHINGTON, June 29.—Lieutenant Ralph Johnson of the army Air Service, who left Arcadia, Fla., at 6:59 A. M., Saturday, on a 1,200-mile nonstop flight to Boston, was forced to land twenty-five miles east of Newbern, N. C. His plane was badly damaged, but he was not injured.

Lieutenant Johnson, who holds the world's record for looping the loop in an airplane, had expected to make the trip to Boston in eleven hours from Carlstrom Field, Arcadia. A message from him today said he had covered 625 miles when he landed. The machine, a De Havilland-4, was so badly damaged, he said, that he was unable to proceed with it. Johnson plans to make another attempt at the 1,200-mile flight.

KERR'S CREW STILL WAITING

Another Day of Bad Weather Delays Handley-Page.

Special to The New York Times.

HARBOR GRACE, June 29.—Unfavorable weather today again prevented the start of the Handley-Page biplane on the Newfoundland to England flight. It is now fifteen days since there has been a favorable opportunity for the crossing—and that opportunity was the one of which the Vickers-Vimy successfully made use while the expedition still here decided it was unwise to make the attempt on account of radiator trouble.

Though not by four full weeks has the Handley-Page expedition been here as long, waiting for fair weather, as were the Sopwith and Martinsyde planes in April and May, the lengthening period of their tarrying here once more is calling attention to the long and difficult road that lies ahead of aviation development before there can be transocean flying on anything like schedule time. The Handley-Page men, in fact, have as little definite idea as to the time of their going today as they had fifteen days ago, though they are still ready to "hop off" at the earliest possible moment.

EAST FORTUNE, Scotland, June 29, (Associated Press.)—The overhauling of the giant British dirigible R-34, in preparation for a flight across the Atlantic, has been so rapid that she will be ready to sail Monday night if ordered to do so.

The weather, however, continues unsettled.

MAP OUT FLIGHTS LIKE GLIDDEN TOURS

Aerial League Arranges Program to Popularize the Airplane as a Pleasure Vehicle.

ARMY AVIATORS AVAILABLE

Distances Vary from One Day to to 3,000-Mile Trips East of the Mississippi River.

The Aerial League of America announced yesterday that it had completed plans for a series of airplane tours, varying in distance from 500 to 3,000 miles, with airships flying in squadron formation, so that the airplane could be made a popular vehicle for pleasure tours, and so that the Government would be enabled to dispose of its surplus stocks of army airplanes. It was explained that the idea of these air tours was taken from the Glidden automobile tours.

"The Aerial League, of which Rear Admiral Robert E. Peary is President, has canvassed part of the 30,000 ex-army and navy reserve aviators, and the 34,000 army cadets who were under training for the Air Service when the war ended, and has found that many are anxious to participate in such tours," said the announcement. "These 64,000 aviators and cadets are all college men, and, besides being directly interested in aviation themselves, have parents and friends who have wanted to make flights but could not do so because army regulations do not permit taking civilians for flights in military airplanes.

To Use Military Planes.

"From the canvass it was found that many would like to participate in these flying tours for sport and pleasure. Others would like to participate as a means of continuing their aeronautic activities and remain connected with the aeronautic movement, so that they would be ready for whatever business opportunities the development of aeronautics may bring.

"Others are interested for technical and scientific reasons, and see in these tours an opportunity of obtaining actual data regarding the cost of operation of an airplane for sport as well as for transportation, and of determining the financial basis of aerial transportation. Others are interested because it is a pioneer movement which will do much toward bringing about the use of airplanes for general purposes, and, therefore, should be supported.

"The use of surplus military and naval airplanes and aeronautic equipment, which can be had at low cost, will bring the pioneer tours within the means of hundreds of persons interested in aeronautics. The pioneer aeroplane tours will create a market for surplus military and naval aeronautic equipment.

"The army had thousands of airplanes and motors, and spare parts, instruments, accessories and materials for thousands more. The navy has more than 1,000 seaplanes stored away, hundreds of which will deteriorate unless used, and, according to Washington reports, are to be sold. The army has already sold more than 2,000 of the idle airplanes and close to 5,000 motors, which are being put on the market at prices comparing favorably with the price of the average automobile."

Courses Laid Out.

It is probable that the tours will start in August, and that seaplane cruises also will be undertaken as soon as possible. The first trips will be restricted to airplanes of ninety to 150 horse power, but additional classes of tours will be added as the interest increases.

At first the tours will be divided into four classes. There will be one-day tours each week, and the planes will fly about 200 miles, remaining in the air about four hours. Week-end tours of about 500 miles probably will last two or three days. "Vacation Week Tours" probably will carry the squadrons about 750 miles, with four hours' sailing a day, and there will be 1,000-mile tours, 1,500-mile tours, 2,500-mile tours and 3,000-mile tours, covering the larger cities east of the Mississippi. Courses for all the tours already have been laid out.

All the planes taking the same tour will fly in squadron formation under a squadron commander. Expert mechanics, spare parts, fuel and supplies will be provided at the stopping places, where necessary repairs will be made, tanks filled and airplanes attended to at the lowest possible charge. The announcement also said that "headquarters for these tours would be established in New York and at the Atlantic City airport, which, being the civilian aeronautic center of the United States and ideally located, will become the starting place and terminus for the tours."

Announcement also was made that an airplane company had agreed to rent machines for one, two or three months "at a cost of less than $2,000 for two persons, including the cost of insurance for the airplane, the pilot and the passenger."

FLYING HERE FROM DAYTON.

Captain Francis to Make Final Test Before Pacific Flight.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, June 29.—Captain Roy N. Francis, who is to attempt a one-stop transcontinental flight from New York to San Francisco, may be able to get away from Hazelhurst Field on his start some time during the coming week.

It was learned late tonight that Captain Francis, who has been at Dayton, Ohio, tuning up his machine and getting ready for the flight, has put the big Martin plane through a series of successful stunts there and that he will probably be able to fly from Dayton to New York, either tomorrow or Tuesday.

This flight will be in the nature of a final long-distance test before starting from Hazelhurst Field on the journey of 2,750 miles to San Francisco, with only one prospective stop.

From what was learned tonight, if the plane is in fit condition on its arrival at Hazelhurst Field, Mineola, Captain Francis will make a very prompt start for the coast.

Foreign Trade to be Under Federal Director After July 1.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, June 27.—The War Trade Board today announced that, effective July 1, all control over the exportation and importation of wheat and wheat flour, heretofore vested in it under the Espionage and Trading With the Enemy act, will be transferred to the United States Wheat Director, in accordance with the proclamation of President Wilson, June 24, under the so-called "Wheat Guarantee act." All outstanding unused export or import licenses issued by the War Trade Board for wheat or wheat flour will be revoked. The board also announces that wheat and wheat flour will be removed, July 1, from the export conservation list and from the list of restricted imports. Inquiries regarding the exportation or importation of wheat and wheat flour should now be addressed to the United States Wheat Director, 42 Broadway, New York City.

TO ASK DATE FOR DAY TRIAL

Bennett Says Coming Inquiry Will Cover a Broad Scope.

Ex-State Senator William M. Bennett announced yesterday that he would reply to the Appellate Division today for approval of an order fixing a date in July for the examination of Commissioner J. C. Day of Public Markets. Mr. Bennett represents the West Side Taxpayers' Association.

"The examination will cover most of the matters specified in my charges to the Mayor against the Commissioner," said Mr. Bennett. "As the order directs him to produce his books, vouchers, and accounts, and also permits the calling of witnesses, I expect the examination to assume a very broad scope. The Mayor informs me that he has referred my charges against Mr. Day to Commissioner of Accounts Hirshfield."

Commissioner Day has approved of a public investigation, asserting that the evidence which he will produce will show that he acted in the best interests of the city and the emergency he had to meet in relieving the food situation among the poor.

Will Unimproved Dwellings—Go Begging?

As every day brings nearer the period of building construction which is uppermost in the minds of several hundred thousand rent-payers, they feel more and more keenly the discomforts of old and unimproved buildings.

Prior to present abnormal conditions these buildings were in most cases operated at such a small margin of profit that they were a drug on the market. While modernized dwellings were available tenants refused to live in unimproved homes.

The return to such conditions will be rapid, unless owners of this class of property take their cue from several of their number farseeing enough to anticipate this change in conditions. These shrewd owners are improving their old dwelling places so that they can compete with the new ones.

Electric service is the first improvement installed. Nothing else can add like comfort to the home. Without it families are deprived of such necessities as electric irons, fans, appliances for cooking and vacuum cleaners.

Apartment halls are vastly improved by electric service. Uniform light, convenience of control, the elimination of bell-ringing and door-opening batteries and the substitution therefor of small transformers operated from the lighting circuit are some of its advantages. The whole tone of the building is improved.

A postal card or telephone request (Stuyvesant 4980) will bring our representative to you. He will tell you how inexpensively and easily your property can be electrified. And if the investment involves a greater immediate expenditure than is convenient for you to make just now, we may perhaps be able to arrange terms.

Nation Faces Critical Coal Shortage

Says the U. S. Government

Buy Your Coal NOW

COAL production has fallen off to an alarming extent. This is due to a combination of causes. No increase in output is possible without quick action by coal consumers.

Coal cannot be produced and held in huge quantities at the mines awaiting the convenience of buyers. It must be moved as fast as produced and kept moving until it finally reaches the consumer.

During the past two years we have been confronted with a coal shortage.

In 1917 it embarrassed our conduct of the war, shut down factories, left cities in darkness, shortened the working hours of public utilities and caused great suffering in many homes.

In 1918, in response to government appeal, consumers bought their coal during the summer months, and as a result of their action and the patriotic and superhuman effort on the part of operators and miners, the greatest production in the history of the country was achieved—namely, 585,000,000 tons. Thus a shortage was averted.

In 1919—the present year—we face this situation:

Requirements for the year (Govt. estimate) (55 million tons less than 1918)	530,000,000 tons
Stocks on hand January 1	30,000,000 "
Coal production required for 1919	500,000,000 "
Coal produced Jan. 1 to June 14, 1919	195,000,000 "
Quantity to be produced during remaining 28 weeks	305,000,000 "
Average weekly production first 24 weeks	8,125,000 "
Average tonnage which must be produced weekly during coming 28 weeks	10,900,000 "

To meet the requirements of the country, production of the mines must be increased 2,775,000 tons each week!

How can this be done?

By buying your coal now. This is the only way to increase production.

If production is not stimulated now, somebody will have no coal this winter.

Will it be you?

Do not think we are alarmists. The figures quoted above are accurate. They are the OFFICIAL figures of the Geological Survey of the United States Government.

Your Government Warns You

Dr. H. A. Garfield, United States Fuel Administrator, has issued a statement to the public as follows:

"Buy now—in August or the Autumn will be too late. A big coal shortage is coming. Thousands of miners are going back to Europe. Coal production has fallen off considerably and a shortage of many million tons looks probable. My advice to consumers is to buy now while they can get a selection and delivery. I feel bound to say that, as I see the situation, we are likely to experience a coal famine in the Fall."

These are all facts. Consider them.

Quick action being so apparent, we cannot urge too strongly that you buy your coal NOW so as to be sure of having it next winter.

SIGNING THE TREATY.

If the ceremony of signing the Peace Treaty in the Hall of Mirrors lacked impressiveness, there are several reasons for the innovation. On the side of the Allies the war was one of democracies, and the representatives of the victors at the Conference table were plain men engaged in the most responsible task that men ever entered upon in a spirit of humility. To make a pageant of the last act in the great drama of saving the liberties of the world would have been unseemly. One cannot imagine CLEMENCEAU or LLOYD GEORGE or WOODROW WILSON lending himself to such a travesty. To those who have eyes to see and an imagination, the occasion was one of unprecedented solemnity, but not one for pomp and display. Never was a peace-making following the arbitrament of battle so simple. Further, the reaction from the long strain of intricate and laborious negotiations could only manifest itself in relief and in the desire to have the curtain rung down quickly and without show. There was another consideration. However severe were the terms imposed upon Germany, there was no disposition to inflict suspense upon her delegates and make a long-drawn-out agony of the proceedings for them.

To the German mind the ceremony may have seemed drab, commonplace, and what was to be expected of a despised enemy, but the enemy was content with the victory, saw the final act in its true proportions, and was too magnanimous to make a spectacle of the signing of the treaty of peace. The historian will describe it with emotion, he will see in it the dawning of a new era, but he cannot write about the ceremony in the grand style.

The war which was to make a German Emperor master of the world lasted five years, less thirty-seven days; the actual recording of his failure and the imposing of sentence upon the offending nation was a matter of forty-nine minutes. In the address opening the last session of the Conference but a few words, devoid of ornament, direct, arid, were spoken; there was a procession of signers to the table, the German delegates filed out in silence and all was over. The only magnificence to be seen was the decorations of the great hall; all else was colorless and uninspiring. A great business had to be done, the most exalted and tremendous the world had ever witnessed, but it was too great for eloquence and display. Even the applause at the end, when CLEMENCEAU and LLOYD GEORGE and WOODROW WILSON appeared on the terrace, was restrained, as if everybody was under the spell of the moment so significant for the welfare of humanity.

Two incidents seemed to mar the solemnizing regularity of the proceedings; the failure of the Chinese delegates to appear and sign the Treaty, because they protested the disposition of Shantung, and the singular reservation of General JAN SMUTS of the Union of South Africa when he signed. The Chinese behavior was unfortunate; they had better have signed with a reservation, or done so and given out a statement of their grievance, which in course of time might have been adjusted. The protest of General SMUTS was only one in name, it seems. A statement he has since given out contains views and observations about the economic state of Europe and the burdens and responsibilities of the future that have occurred to a great many people; and the advice that the General gives to the Germans and to the Allies is a warning in the one case and a plea in the other for patience and indulgence in the working out of the mutual problem. Surely if the Allies consider only selfish ends and fail to steer in the troubled sea by the ideals for which they fought, the covenant will prove the greatest failure in history. It was really not necessary for the gallant soldier to point out the breakers.

President WILSON in his address to the American people has struck the true keynote. He recognizes that the terms of the Treaty are severe but "only because great wrongs done by "Germany are to be righted and repaired." And he goes on to say in words that will live that "it is much "more than a treaty of peace with "Germany," being a compact, to which the honor of the Allies is pledged, for the liberation of peoples "who have never been able to find "their way to liberty"; it makes an end of the "old and intolerable order," under which a few selfish men "could use the peoples of great empires to serve their ambition for "power and dominion," and creates a League of Nations "to maintain peace by maintaining right and justice." And, finally, Mr. WILSON says that it makes a new world in which there should be no injustice and liberty should be a reality, not a sentiment for rhapsodizing. It is, as the President says, "a great charter for a new order of affairs."

ENEMIES OF DEMOCRACY.

What is it that they want, the men who demand a hands-off policy in Russia? Is it possible that they are anxious for a continuance of industrial demoralization and anarchy and the permanent overthrow of democracy? Here is Mr. ARTHUR HENDERSON in England announcing to the Labor Conference that British, French, and Italian labor representatives have decided to make a general demonstration on July 20 or 21 to protest against allied intervention in Russia. Here is Senator HIRAM W. JOHNSON in the United States moving heaven and earth to get the few American soldiers in Russia moved out. What is it that they want?

At the same time comes the news that the Siberian Army is retreating before a more powerful force of the Bolsheviki. The issue between democracy, which means the government of the whole people by the people, and the rule of one class over all other classes, is clear cut. The fate of democracy hangs in the balance. Democracy calls for help. Senator JOHNSON and these British, French, and Italian "labor representatives" protest against it, call for the denial of that help.

If they say that they would let Russia work out her own salvation, it is a fine impartiality they show between democracy and the control of one class over all other classes. Democracy is embodied in the idea of a Constituent Assembly, containing representatives of all classes elected by the people. Looking back, it is easy to see why the Bolsheviki dispersed that assembly. From their standpoint it was the right thing to do; for the Constituent Assembly represented democracy, and democracy is their foe, the thing they are trying utterly to destroy. The Bolsheviki take identically the same attitude toward democracy that was taken by the Czar, though even the Czar was willing to put up with a Duma.

The Omsk and Archangel Governments and General DENIKINE are fighting for the opportunity to elect another Constituent Assembly. Nothing could be more abhorrent to the new autocracy, which does not intend to allow any other class than its own to occupy other than a voiceless and subservient position. In this struggle between democracy and autocracy it is impossible to be neutral, and it is especially hard for democrats to be neutral, Democracies should help one another. That is what they have been doing for the last four years, with the result that there is only one tyranny left in Europe—that in Russia, the rule of one class over all other classes.

We have fought to make the world safe for democracy. Does that mean that it shall be safe for democracy everywhere but in Russia? And what are men who pretend to be democrats doing when they seek to cripple the Russian democracy and aid the Russian tyranny? Senator JOHNSON is a citizen of a free republic and assumes, we suppose, to be a believer in democracy. How does he reconcile his Americanism with his antagonism to democracy in Russia and his support of class rule? For, however he may disguise it, that is what his attitude comes to. He is proposing, as far as lies in the power of the United States, to cripple the cause of democracy and render aid and comfort to that of the new despotism.

THE END OF WILKINS.

In the same jail in which ENOCH MUENTER, better known as FRANK HOLT, committed suicide four years ago, Dr. WILKINS, the convicted murderer of his wife, has committed suicide. What is there about the Nassau County Jail which facilitates suicide? Are there no men there to watch prisoners, and if they are what kind of men are they? It is about time that a searching investigation was made into the conditions in that institution.

Dr. WILKINS was, when in command of himself, an audacious and cool-headed criminal. There were times when he lost his head, as when he shaved and disguised himself and fled. But he quickly repaired his error and returned to give himself up, and remained bold and cool throughout his trial. Nevertheless, it was that error which made it impossible to acquit him, no matter how much dust was thrown in the eyes of the jury. The fact that after the murder of his wife he disguised himself and fled was moral evidence of a kind that could not be got over by any balancing of probabilities and circumstantial evidence for and against.

BETHMANN HOLLWEG AS HERO.

The German is funniest when he is posing as chivalrous. Nothing could be funnier than Dr. VON BETHMANN HOLLWEG'S offer to substitute himself for the ex-Kaiser as a defendant before the international tribunal. The object of the move is plainly revealed in the last sentence; it is to put the Allies in a hole. The Chancellor is legally responsible for the acts of his sovereign; therefore, if the Allies do not grant Dr. BETHMANN'S request they will be guilty of infringing international law. Of course, the Allies will not grant it, and therefore, the German mind reasons, they will be in the pillory of public opinion. It is amazing to what cheap tricks the German mind turns after all is lost, not in the hope of winning anything back, but in the hope of being able to score a technical point somewhere. It is of a piece with the apparently endless series of stratagems with which they pushed forward for a few days the signing of the Treaty, which they knew they must sign in the end. The gain of a few days by these tricks was in their eyes a comforting moral triumph.

As for Dr. BETHMANN'S legal point, it is not worth a rush. The Kaiser and his officers are to be tried, not as a Kaiser and as Generals, but as men who committed crimes. It was not BETHMANN who conceived the idea of the Potsdam conference at which it was agreed to start the war, and the legal fiction of his responsibility cannot be stretched to cover a conclusion so absurd. It was not BETHMANN who ordered or permitted the atrocities, and there is no law which can make him guilty of it. The indictment lies not against the late Emperor, but against WILLIAM HOHENZOLLERN, a man, and the man who headed a conspiracy of which BETHMANN may have had no knowledge, and in the carrying out of which BETHMANN was no more than the pen in WILLIAM HOHENZOLLERN'S hand.

THE PROBLEM OF THE STORK.

It scarcely needed the high adventures of BOBBY ASH to tell us that a baby is the most interesting object in nature or civilization. Found in an ashcan five months ago, BOBBY was taken into the home of a prosperous securities broker, cared for by a nurse, swaddled in luxury, and aired in an automobile. But legal technicalities intervened, and BOBBY must now be returned to the New York Nursery and Child's Hospital. This romantic story has been chronicled in the press together with somewhat less romantic stories about the former Crown Prince and the devious adventures of the Peace Treaty.

It is not without significance that BOBBY was found in an ashcan. Most modern babies are like the hero of OSCAR WILDE'S farce, who was found as an abandoned bundle in a railway station; their origin is a terminal. At the time of the Franco-Prussian war the population of France and Germany was about the same, approximately 40,000,000. In 1914 Germany had almost doubled in population, while France had remained virtually stationary. In the United States the birthrate is markedly tending toward that of France, and also in Great Britain, though more slowly. In all three countries the shrinkage is largely among salaried brain workers—the folk who are so often proclaimed as the mainstay of the nation. Only the "proletariat" is still prolific.

The intelligent and well-to-do, meantime, seem more interested than ever in babies. Foundling homes are besieged by married folk eager to adopt nameless infants. Some years ago a farce was written about a woman who tried to palm off a foundling upon her husband as his own child. Its popularity was amazing, here and in England. Eventually it received what, for a farce, amounts to apotheosis: it was made into a musical comedy. One touch of baby made the whole world grin. But somewhere and somehow, obviously, things are going wrong. The world of free institutions has defeated the German Army and the German Navy, but the German baby goes marching on. It does not help the case that his future is to be not military but industrial. Against armed power the world is united in a resolute and triumphant will, but against a swarming multitude of hands and brains it will be powerless unless it meet like with like.

Our shortcoming, doubtless, is attributable to the stork. In the distribution of his favors among us the silly bird must be made more general, and indeed more generous. Of old he had no predilection for ashcans. His favorite haunts were the houses of the bourgeoisie, on whose chimney-tops he nested, a cartwheel being perched there for his convenience. The landlords of our apartment houses are not at present in a very suggestible mood, but really there should be a cartwheel on the roof for each tenant.

If the landlord is obdurate, he should be voted down. And he can be, for this is a matter in which the newly enfranchised woman is specially interested. A groping male once confided to a feminist leader certain doubts as to the natural destiny of Woman. Did it not lie outside and above the arena of politics—as the priestess and guardian of the race, of its health and its welfare, physical, mental, and moral? The answer had no dubious sound. "Fundamental problems," this leader replied, "such as race suicide, eugenics, celibacy, &c., are beside the suffrage question. If any one hopes to "solve them through suffrage, he is "on the wrong path. No suffragist, "however uninformed, would hold "such premises." But victory brings the calmer mood, the saner and more tolerant outlook.

In Los Angeles they have ostrich farms, the live stock of which yield abundant plumes for women. Is it possible to convert these farms into universities for the stork, and there teach him to improve his nesting? "Not feathers but babies!" should be the words on their escutcheons. The problem is a difficult one. Though the commercial product of the ostrich is vanity, his nature is amenable to discipline; he stays on the ground. Your stork, though he deals in the commodity most essential to human happiness and progress, seems somehow to be a vain and flighty creature.

SOME CONSEQUENCES OF COMPROMISE.

The perplexities born of a division of opinions on knotty questions undoubtedly troubled the minds of the Peace Conference when it was passing on such questions; and it did its best, which may be presumed to have been as good as anything that could have been done by any other group of public men. Nevertheless, its deliberations have left some diplomatic situations of great delicacy. The questions of the Adriatic and Aegean, and others of the problems left by the collapse of Austria-Hungary and Turkey, are still unsettled; even in making peace with Germany we have had to leave certain things in a state of highly unstable equilibrium.

China has refused to sign the Treaty because the Conference would not allow her delegates to make reservations or to set forth declarations of their attitude. Behind this point of procedure lies the enduring Chinese dissatisfaction with the Shantung settlement. Japan, according to the decision of the Peace Conference, was to retain the German concessions, but to return territorial sovereignty of the province to China. Return it, but when? Japanese delegates asserted that to ask Japan to set a time for the return would be an affront to her national honor, so the Conference left it to national honor to return Shantung at whatever time might be convenient to Japan. The understanding was that this time was to be soon; but the Chinese have been unable to get any promises, and they are afraid that the Japanese will hold Shantung indefinitely—always with the promise to return it some time. The Japanese boast that their Government has never broken its promise; since no time limit was set, it does not need to break this one.

The Chinese have not forgotten that the Japanese tried to keep the Chinese delegation out of the Conference altogether. They did not succeed in that, but they succeeded in everything else. Japan has Shantung for as long as she wants to keep it. The Conference realized, beyond question, that this was inequitable; but it seemed expedient. Even the expediency of the arrangement is now open to doubt. China refuses to sign the Treaty and may stay out of the League of Nations; China has a grievance against the great alliance. If Germany is to be in a position, in the next few years, to resume her world intrigues, to try to recover her position as a world Power supported by allies, or by allied groups in neutral countries, China is likely to be a hospitable field for German intrigue. The Chinese have not fared well at the hands of the other side; it would be foolish, but quite understandable, if they should elect to listen to the enemy.

The Japanese, of course, are well aware of this; and it seems far from impossible that Japan will expect the rest of the League of Nations to intrust her with the task of keeping German influence out of China, and incidentally solidifying Japanese influence in China. If the League is favorable to China it will have Japan against it, if it supports Japan it will have China against it.

Something of the same sort is the case in Russia, where the Germans have a way of approach open to almost every faction. The rest of the world, despite frequent lapses from its own moral standards, is at least hampered by a certain amount of unselfish interest; we want Russia to be peaceful and prosperous because it will be convenient for us, but also because it will be good for the Russians; none of the Atlantic nations would be capable of fomenting trouble in Russia to the hurt of the Russians purely to serve its own interests. But the Germans have no such inhibitions.

The Government of LENIN is antagonistic to the present Government of Germany, to be sure; but it is more antagonistic to France, England, and America. The opposition between Bolshevism and the Atlantic democracies is inevitable and permanent; the antagonism between Russian Bolshevism and Germany is something that can be forgotten, as it was a year ago, when the interests of the two ran together. Yet we have given no great reason for gratitude to KOLCHAK; we have come to his help very late and very feebly. Moreover, considerable numbers of Russians of the democratic, pro-Ally parties are deeply dissatisfied with allied recognition of the States formed by the border peoples of the old Russian Empire. They are reconciled to the loss of Poland; but they cannot make up their minds as yet to give up Finland, Lithuania, Letvia, Esthonia, and the Caucasus. Admiral KOLCHAK says, and correctly, that his Government cannot resign Russian claims to territory; that must be the work of a Constituent Assembly. But among the parties most favorable to us many men are saying that there seems to be no difference between this treaty and that of Brest-Litovsk; Russia is crippled by one as well as by the other.

Of course, there is a difference: the Germans hacked off as much of Russia as they thought they could control and set up puppet States in the vain effort to veil their annexation. The Allies recognize Governments representing the actual will of the border peoples, who want to set up for themselves. But there are many Russians who do not like it, who have been more or less estranged by the recognition. On the other hand, if we had not recognized them, the border States would have been estranged and would have looked, perhaps, to Germany. German infiltration along the Baltic and in the Ukraine has already made considerable progress; Germany has no principles, she can take any side or all sides at once if it is convenient.

China and Russia are two promising fields opened for German intrigue, if Germany ever has the power to return to her old position of the disturber of every continent. That many Germans have the eager desire to return to that position we know; it is another reason why Germany must be made safe, why the terms of the Treaty which will hold her powerless till she has a change of heart, or sees the expediency of mending her ways, are necessary guarantees of world peace.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

New Yorkers to Have Social Units.

Following, in effect if not in intention, a course somewhat like the one made familiar by the producers of plays, the originators of the "social unit" idea, though themselves New Yorkers, or at least residents of New York, did not give here what might be called their first performance, and should be called their first practical test, but went to Cincinnati and conducted it there. Now, as told in THE TIMES yesterday, they are hoping and preparing to repeat in this city what they think was the brilliant success achieved in Ohio.

That it was a success in Ohio not all observers agree, but it is a notable and probably significant fact that adverse criticism of the social unit plan of managing neighborhood affairs—"neighborhood" being a word capable of covering any amount of ground—comes from people whose opinions, when their own interests are concerned, are open to suspicion, and that the only really bitter denouncers of social unit schemes and schemers are the politicians with the smooth working of whose machines they threaten seriously to interfere.

The menace to the politicians, and especially to those of the ward or district leader class, lies in the fact that the social uniters, or unitarians, or whatever may be their generic name, aspire, first of all, to bring about a constant, active, intelligent, and instructed supervision of community affairs by 100 per cent. of the people in the community, or rather by 100 per cent. of those over 18 years old, with no sex line drawn. The old-school leaders do not like that, their preference, naturally, being for real action only by small groups of carefully selected and easily controlled followers, with the ordinary citizen doing nothing except vote for or against a "ticket" in the preparation of which he had no part.

Some Harsh Words Misapplied.

Quite the most serious charge made against the social unit idea as it was worked out in Cincinnati during the last two and a half years is that it was either socialistic or the entering wedge for socialism. Sometimes this accusation is raised to a higher power, and "Bolshevists" and "Bolshevism" are the words used. There seems to be no evidence that any of these words are correctly or justly applied. Bolshevistic in even the slightest degree the methods followed and the ends sought certainly have not been.

Whether they were socialistic or not depends on the sense in which that word is taken—on whether its meaning is limited to cover only the activities more or less "red," or whether it depends on its etymological significance, which is, of course, entirely innocent.

But "Socialist" is now a term held in such low esteem by sensible people that the prospects of getting a welcome here for the social unit plan would be appreciably better if its promoters had chosen a name less likely to cause misunderstandings as to the direction of their aims. They are as far as possible from wanting to set up a Soviet government, and they worship at the shrines of neither MARX nor LENIN. Co-operation in a somewhat elaborate form is what they seek to establish, and though in the past Americans have not taken very kindly to co-operative enterprises, Cincinnati, its politicians and some of its tradesmen apart, seems to have liked the unit plan and to have found it workable.

Bolshevism Taught to Negroes.

Of all the many efforts which the Rand School has been making to extend its seditious propaganda, none will or should excite more vehement indignation than that to undermine the loyalty of the negroes. Documents laid before the Lusk committee prove conclusively, not that the efforts were successful, indeed, but that they were elaborate and determined, as well as utterly ruthless, and that they involved the expenditure of money in considerable amounts.

The leader in this branch of the school's work is himself a negro, but presumably he is not an American negro, as his name is DOMINGO, and by the cynical contempt he expressed for the character and intelligence of negro preachers he showed how far he is from respecting the standards accepted by most American negroes. He described them as "owned body and soul by the capitalist class," and said that they were "the most parasitical of celestial navigators." At the Rand School that latter phrase was probably much admired, but it is not likely to be warmly applauded by colored church-goers or their clergy.

What DOMINGO thinks of negro preachers, however, is a matter of no particular consequence to them or anybody else. What is serious, and very serious, is that he and others like him, with the encouragement of the Rand School radicals, have been spreading the doctrines of revolutionary Russia through a part of the American population ill prepared by education or experience for judging the value of these doctrines. That they are more likely to be misled by them than other American elements is somewhat doubtful, but the possibility that they are is distinctly alarming for the States where they are most numerous.

White Southerners must have quite clear-cut opinions as to the propriety of inculcating their colored neighbors with the tenets of Bolshevism.

This Lawyer Needs Enlightenment.

That extent of knowledge and accuracy of language of which lawyers boast as characteristic of their class were not shown by the counsel for the Society of Restaurateurs when he attempted to illustrate what he considers the mistake Congress will make if it characterises as intoxicating liquids which in reality are without the power to intoxicate. That will be as outrageously arbitrary, declared Mr. HIRST, as it would be to call a mushroom, which is innocuous, a toadstool, which is harmful.

His distinction between fungous growths is one that makes the mycologist shudder every time he hears it, for "toadstool" is a word he never uses, and he knows that no such line can be drawn in the domain that commands his interest.

There are mushrooms and mushrooms, some safely edible and others more or less poisonous, but the difference is one of varieties, not of species or genera. There is, indeed, hardly a single mushroom family all the members of which are everywhere wicked. "Toadstool" is a word for children to use, lawyers and other Wise Ones should avoid it.

UNIONS OF PROFESSIONS.

In Favor of the Engineers Joining the A. F. of L.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

If the letter of Mr. Channing, Chairman of the Engineering Council, was intended as an answer to mine of the 14th instant, it certainly did not meet the issue squarely. In my letter I agreed with Mrs. Atherton that if professionals desired salary increases, affiliation with the American Federation of Labor was the most effective means of attaining that end.

That the employed professionals are extremely underpaid is conceded by every one who is acquainted with the situation. The question has therefore resolved itself to this, "How can this condition be remedied to the end that a salary scale commensurate with their contribution to the community may be established?" Can the older engineering societies through this council do this? It is the opinion of a rapidly increasing number that they cannot, notwithstanding their recital of activities on our behalf. The most that can be expected is that glaring injustices will be removed.

It is with no disrespect to our "successful" engineers that this attitude is taken. It is the result of an analysis of the conditions existing and a proper understanding of the psychology of our superiors, chief engineers, consulting engineers, and the like, who have always been efficiency worshippers, intent upon keeping down engineering costs, and a recognition of their relation to those who employ us.

Let us grant, for the sake of argument, that as a result of their studies and investigations the societies recommend a universal salary scale commensurate with the increase in the cost of living. What guarantee have they that their recommendation will be accepted? If our superiors are sincere in their efforts to see that justice is done, they can do nothing better than encourage this move for establishing a scale that will reflect credit and dignity on the profession. The employed professionals should not be discouraged in their resolve to participate in determining their future status. The trend toward unionization is unmistakable. Any one who attended the last meeting of the Rapid Transit Engineers' Association would have been convinced of that.

TO OMAR KHAYYAM.

Wake! For on the books in fatal ink
Is writ the law: Thou shalt not drink.
Wake, Omar, for tonight's your final spree—
The grape-filled cup now stands upon the brink.

Before the morning-after dawns—the night
Before—carouse; in wild, retreating flight
The grape will soon desert the temple's vault,
And take with it life's One delight.

And then will close the good old tavern door,
The famous toast upon the barroom floor
No one will speak, for every human throat,
Once parched, now so remains forevermore.

A Book of Free Verse in Van Cortlandt Park,
A corn'd-beef sandwich that must last till dark,
A maid to share your milkshake, lacking "kick"—
But this, and nothing more, can be your lark!

There is the door to which you'll find no key,
There is the vault where no red wine you'll see,
Some wishy-washy imitations—yes—
But not the juice that's known to you and me.

And yet, if we the suds must fling aside,
And send John Barleycorn upon a ride,
Were't not a shame—were't not a shame,
If any man from thirsty throat e'er died?

O Love, could you and I with John conspire,
We soon would set the Gay White Way on fire,
And, since 'tis but the Grape can quench that flame,
Would we not drink unto our heart's desire!

Yet this is but a yearning dream, I think;
The law yet bids: Thou shalt not drink!
Wake, Omar, for tonight's your farewell spree—
The grape-filled cup now stands upon the brink.

LETTERS ABOUT IRELAND.

Some Expressions of Opinion Here on De Valera's Appeal for American Support.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Peace has been signed, but there are millions of relatives and friends of 300,000 Americans who lie under the sod of France or have been badly wounded who will never forget the Germans. Yet at this very moment there has arrived in America a so-called president of a so-called Republic of Ireland who is holding forth in criticism of the English, whose blood with that of the loyal Irish, the French, and Americans has soaked the soil of France.

Let us not forget that it was these same followers of Edward de Valera who acted so ignominiously during the war, by holding back and hindering the Allies and delivering what assistance they could to the foe. Who knows how many Americans perished through hostile submarines finding a friendly refuge on the shores of Ireland?

One has only to go to Father Brown, the nephew and secretary of the Bishop of Queenstown, to hear one of the most heartrending tales of the whole war—the story of the night of the day the Lusitania was sunk—to learn the type of man de Valera represents.

On the morning of the sinking of the Lusitania Father Brown, when looking over the sunlit harbor of Queenstown, heard a rumor that the Lusitania had been torpedoed. He was greatly relieved later when the report was denied, and went forth to visit the sick. But on returning from the home of one parishioner he was shocked to learn that the great ship had been sunk. From one of the cathedral spires he watched with a field glass and saw the Admiralty tug Stormcock steaming forth, with other craft, to help in the rescue work. With a heavy heart this Roman Catholic priest awaited the dreaded homecoming of the vessels with survivors, hoping that none had been lost.

It was nearly dark that evening when sloops, destroyers, and tugs slipped into Queenstown harbor with their cargoes of woe and dead. There were frail women in wet clothes who had spent hours in open boats, half filled with water; there were men and women clinging to their dead, not always with the hope that these burdens could ever utter words again, but with a desire to have them buried somewhere whither they could go and place flowers. Father Brown saw men holding dead babies, and the brother of one little survivor—whose picture now stands on the mantel of Father Brown's room in the Bishop's palace—was placed on the wharf and snatched up by the wrong mother. A steward cuddled a living child and finally found the infant's distracted mother. She had lost one and found one. Later the second child was found among the rows of dead. A tiny boy of four, who clung to his mother's skirts, believed that such proceedings occurred at every landing of passengers. He complained of the cold, and a sailor took off his thick woolen socks and gave them to the child. There was a distressing silence as the survivors and dead were brought ashore, some survivors breathing their last on the wharf. The scene beggars description and Father Brown never tells it without tears in his eyes.

Sinn Feiners looked on and when assistance was wanted—begged for—they denied it. Eventually they refused to dig graves or to permit even those who might have been moved to help in doing so. Soldiers were wanted in France and no time was to be lost in their training. Notwithstanding this, they had to be sent for to dig graves for the Lusitania dead. The constituents of de Valera were not at war with Germany, they claimed. More graves might have been dug and identification might have been made easier, but owing to the conditions, with the military gravediggers harassed wherever the Sinn Feiners found it possible, only two graves were dug for all the bodies brought ashore at Queenstown. Relatives of some of the Americans who have visited the old cemetery have contended themselves with placing wreaths on the mounds at Queenstown, most of the mottoes reading in unforgiving words such as "'Vengeance is Mine,' saith the Lord."

Self-Determination.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I think that the following questions are pertinent to the subject of Ireland: Where does the principle of self-determination, enunciated by President Wilson and accepted by all the allied powers, come in when we consider the Irish question? Why does England vociferously demand that self-determination be applied to Rumania and Poland and deny it to Ireland? In short, why does England refuse even the degree of self-government to the Irish people that is enjoyed by the Canadians and the Australians?

I am firmly convinced that the same love of justice and liberty which led the doughty little Belgian people to sacrifice their all in repelling the Hun invader animates Irishmen today in casting forth their oppressor of centuries. This oppressor has sought by every devious artifice at its command to repress the earnest longings of the Irish nation for independence. It is hypocrisy, pure and simple, for propagandists to point with scorn to the wholesale massacre of the Armenians by the Turks, and the deliberate killing of the youths of Serbia to exterminate their race, when England's rule in Ireland for scores of years was nothing but a reign of terror. Ireland's sons and daughters exiled to every nation that is blessed with the light of God's sun bear ample proof to the charge that Ireland was maltreated by lordly Britain.

CHARLES JOHN GLEASON.
New York, June 28, 1919.

Home Rule but Not Independence.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Being a Scot, I am, like the great majority of my fellow-countrymen, an ardent supporter of home rule for Ireland, since such a measure seems to be the only means of satisfying the majority of the Irish people. The argument put forward by many supporters of the British Government, attempting to blame the Irish themselves for the present unhappy condition of the country, seems to me somewhat futile. It is true that the convention appointed by the Government failed to evolve any satisfactory scheme of home rule for Ireland, but the failure was in great part due to the stubbornness of the representatives of the Ulster counties; and if the only way to establish self-government in Ireland is by coercing the north, then it should be done. The Protestant minority in Ulster would be in no worse position than the British minority in South Africa or the French minority in Canada, and, moreover, it would, under the provisions of the League of Nations, enjoy the same protection as the minorities in the other countries.

However, it is as well that the friends of Ireland in America or elsewhere should recognize the fact that there can be no independent or "separatist" republic in Ireland. It was essential to the existence of France as a nation that England should finally relinquish her last foothold on French soil; it was of high import to these United States of America that the South should not be allowed to separate from the North, and it is just as necessary to the welfare of Great Britain that Ireland should remain a part of the empire. How many Americans would agree to an independent and probably hostile republic being established in the State of California?

Support for the Sinn Fein movement cannot advance the cause of Irish freedom, but it may increase the possibilities of civil war in Ireland and destroy the now firmly established friendship of the English-speaking peoples. Such a consummation can not be desired by the majority of the American people.

FRIEND OF IRELAND.
New York, June 21, 1919.

For Irish Independence.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In a letter to you of recent date, a New York gentleman took exception to some statements of mine in which I championed the cause of the Irish Republic, and wished the people of that nation godspeed in their glorious fight for their rights.

He said that any schoolboy would remember the 1914 strife in Ireland, when some of the people there fought to keep from being separated from the United Kingdom. I would like to remind the gentleman that perhaps that same schoolboy would be able to tell him that conditions have changed in Ireland during the last few years. The world we live in today is not the world we lived in during the months of 1914 and 1918. It is possible, though, that the gentleman doesn't like to think of Ireland being in the world at all.

If he would take the trouble to read up on the December, 1918, political elections in Ireland, and on other activities taking place there since then, he would soon awake to the fact that the greater part of Ulster feels about Irish freedom as do her southern neighbors.

I reiterate that fully 80 per cent. of the people of the Erin Isle, irrespective of their religious affiliation, are in favor of self-government, untrammeled by any British influence or coercion whatsoever.

England for over seven hundred years has succeeded beautifully in making ongrand mess of things in Ireland, and now the citizenship of that country has decided to take matters into its own hands.

I fail utterly to understand how any true-blooded American, by any conceivable process of reasoning, can deny Ireland's right to be made free. It seems to me that the heart of every man and woman of the United States would go out in pity for the downtrodden people of the ancient isle.

We who for so many years have enjoyed the rights of liberty and happiness find it difficult to realise that not only are there some people in the world who do not enjoy the national benefits we are granted, but that there are those who are actually oppressed, viciously oppressed by a power of superior might. It is only brute force that gives British politics the whip hand over Ireland—not brains, not intellect, not courage, not honor.

I suppose, though, that we Americans have become so accustomed to freedom and self-expression that we take these prerogatives for granted, as some people do the sun and the stars. However, this disposition to undervalue, or rather not properly appreciate, our own national blessings, should not render us callous to the rights and natural aspirations of the less fortunate of our world neighbors.

Above all we should be consistent, not only as individuals but as a nation, and we should demand that anybody who poses as our spokesman in international affairs should likewise be consistent and adhere strictly to a policy of consistency.

Not only for the self-respect of the present generation of our fellow-citizens but also for the future good name and honor of the United States, we should stand fast by Ireland now as we have stood firmly by the other little nations. Otherwise America will stand, self-accused, as a monster of inconsistency, injustice, and ingratitude—a nation which was not so great but that she could stoop to discriminate against the country whose descendants have done more for her than have the descendants of any other one nation in the world.

Official United States statistics are replete with the names of Irishmen and men of Irish extraction who have laid down their lives for America in all of her wars. In every rank of American civic and social life the Irish have distinguished themselves. Not only in this country but in all the other countries on the globe Irish people have proved themselves loyal and worth-while citizens. Then why not give them a country of their own.

There are many thousands of my fellow-countrymen who love Ireland as intensely as I do, and who are hurt and disappointed at the policy of silence which the President has adopted toward the Irish cause. The United States herself is responsible for this nation-wide sympathy for the freedom of Erin, for it was she who taught her sons and daughters what the wondrous thing called liberty is, and they are naturally moved to compassion and righteous indignation in turning from a contemplation of their own countless privileges to a consideration of the unhappy thralldom of a sister nation.

It is generally admitted, even by anti-Irish sympathisers, that there should be and must be some settlement of this question, some adjustment of the difficulties between Ireland and Great Britain.

This is true, and there is but one way in which to bring about harmony between these widely differing peoples. That is by complete separation. One might just as well try to mix water and oil as to attempt to effect any concord between Ireland and her overlord.

If Ireland is not freed now she will continue to be an element of discontent and dissatisfaction, and her feelings will radiate to America and many other parts of the globe. For the good of all concerned, and some that are not concerned, the separation had best take place now. Let England do it as gracefully as she knows how, and be done with it. The Irish people will not be cowed, and the day will surely come, sooner or later, when Ireland will throw off her age-welded shackles, and, emerging gloriously from her long bondage, honorably take her place among the nations of the world.

ARMY WANTS MEN FOR SIBERIAN UNITS

Will Make Special Effort During Next Two Weeks to Recruit for Service There.

CHANCE YET TO SEE RHINE

Soldiers for This Contingent Will Be Accepted Until Saturday Night —Many New Enlistments.

Orders were received yesterday by the Army Recruiting Service to make special efforts for the next two weeks to enlist men for service with the American units in Siberia. According to the telegram, signed by Major Gen. Peter C. Harris, Adjutant General of the army, men who wish to serve in Siberia may choose any branch of the service. The announcement at the recruiting headquarters at 461 Eighth Avenue was made by Lieutenant John A. Kiley.

"Qualified applicants without prior service may be accepted," said the message from the Adjutant General, "and in addition to the infantry and the medical departments, applicants may be accepted for the Quartermaster Corps and the Ordnance Department, and suitably qualified men for the 53d Telegraph Battalion or Signal Corps. Enlistments for three years only. Applicants accepted will be sent to the nearest recruiting depot en route to Presidio, San Francisco."

Officers at the recruiting station in Eighth Avenue said yesterday that service in Siberia had been open to recruits throughout the campaign, but that no special effort had been made to secure men for that service. Efforts had been exerted chiefly toward enlisting men for service in the American units in France and on the Rhine, but now, that that contingent is virtually made up, the officers and men of the Recruiting Service will tell more of the advantages of service in other foreign fields. Recruits will be accepted for the Rhine army until next Saturday night.

Major C. B. Howard of the Recruiting Service pointed out yesterday that the total enlistments for the metropolitan district for last week were more than 400, and that it was estimated that that number was about one-fifth or one-sixth of the total of recruits throughout the country. For the first five days of the week the average number of men accepted for service was about sixty-seven a day. Incomplete figures for Saturday indicated that the total would be more than 400, a high weekly average in peace time recruiting.

JUDEANS HONOR WAR'S DEAD

Convention Held Memorial Service for the Fallen.

LONG BRANCH, N. J., June 29.—Delegates to the eleventh annual convention of Young Judaeans put in a busy day here today at their regular business session at which 300 delegates, many of them from Canada, were present. "Young Judaean and Zionist Organization" was discussed by Louis Lipsky; "The International Young Judaean," by Emanuel Nauman; "The Problem of the Unschooled," by Dr. Alexander Dushkin, and "The Senior Young Judaean," by David Schneeberg.

Several congratulatory messages were received, including one from Supreme Court Justice Brandeis, who is on his way to Palestine. Tonight Mayor Narsau Woolley addressed the convention. A memorial service was held for those who were killed in the war. At the sessions tomorrow morning there will be an election of officers.

THREE SEEK EISNER'S PLACE

McElliot, Gibbons, or Brogan Likely to be Made Collector.

The names of three candidates for Internal Revenue Collector for the Third District, which comprises upper Manhattan, were mentioned yesterday as having been sent to Secretary Carter Glass of the Treasury, to succeed Mark Eisner, who resigned in March. The applicants are Richard J. McElliot, who has been Acting Collector; William Gibbons, an employe in the Customs Service, and Edward S. Brogan, a former Assistant District Attorney. It was said that ex-Secretary of the Treasury William G. McAdoo had recommended Mr. Gibbons and that Mr. Eisner had approved the candidacy of his Deputy.

Mr. Brogan said yesterday that his supporters included Assistant Secretary of the Navy Franklin D. Roosevelt, George Gordon Battle, H. Snowden Marshall, Francis P. Garvan, ex-Senator James A. O'Gorman, and twenty-five representatives of financial interests, which include the Board of Governors of the New York Stock Exchange, Liberty Loan Committee, National Credit Men's Association, and the Bankers' Investment Association.

Mr. Brogan was formerly and Examiner and Secretary of the State Banking Department.

INSPECT NAVAL ACADEMY.

100 Congressmen Look Over Proposed Site for Laboratory.

Mudd of this Congressional district, and a member of the House Committee on Naval Affairs, headed a delegation of 100 members of the House who visited the Naval Academy today. They were received with formal honors and were entertained by Admiral Scales, Superintendent, and the heads of the departments, after a thorough inspection of the grounds and buildings.

POSES AS BUYER FOR PRISON

Sing Sing Warden Learns Impostor is Placing Crockery Orders.

Special to The New York Times.

OSSINING, June 29.—An impostor professing to represent Sing Sing Prison, it was learned today, is placing unauthorized orders for crockery by the wholesale in New York City for the institution.

Warden Edward V. Brophy received a call from a New York crockery concern saying that an order for $1,900 worth of goods had been placed with it for the prison, and he was asked where he wished to have it delivered. The Warden surprised the merchant when he informed him that he had authorized no such purchase. The Warden is inclined to believe that some crank has a delusion that he is working for the prison.

CAN'T HAVE $22,500 INCOME.

Surrogate Refuses to Raise Miss Carroll's Annuity from $18,500.

Notwithstanding her contention that the high cost of living made it difficult for her to get along on $18,500 a year, Surrogate Fowler has denied the application of Miss Lorena Carroll that this allowance from her father's estate be increased to $22,500.

When Joseph D. Carroll, horseman and Tammany politician died, after making liberal provision for his widow, Mrs. Mattie Carroll, he created a trust fund of $150,000, the income from which was to be paid to his daughter until she became 21 years old, at which time she was to receive the residue of his estate outright, which amounts to $1,250,000. Miss Carroll had been receiving the income from the trust fund, which at first amounted to but $7,500 a year, but, pleading wartime conditions, she went before the Surrogate's Court and succeeded in having her allowance increased on several occasions until it now stands at $18,500 a year.

She recently made another appeal to Surrogate Fowler to increase her allowance to $22,500 and, in support of her plea, presented to the court an itemized account of her yearly budget. This showed that she had to contribute $2,000 toward the rent of her mother's apartment; $5,000 general expenses, which included clothing, hair dressing, and manicuring; $2,500 for two automobiles and a chauffeur, and entertainments for persons of social standing who entertained her mother and herself. Travel and other expenses brought the sum to $22,500.

POLACCO WEDS MRS. MASON

Conductor and Opera Singer Are Married in New Jersey.

Giorgio Polacco, former conductor of the Metropolitan and more recently of the Chicago Opera Company, and Mrs. Edith Mason, a soprano who sang at the Metropolitan two seasons ago, were married yesterday at the Summer home of Mr. and Mrs. John Keith, at Allenhurst, N. J. The bride wore a blue traveling costume and a hat to match. There were no attendants. They left immediately after the ceremony for Philadelphia and will go on to Colorado Springs, the home of the bride's mother. Mr. and Mrs. Keith, who were the wedding witnesses, were also the witnesses at the marriage of Signor Caruso and Miss Benjamin last Fall.

Mrs. Polacco has been married twice before, first in St. Louis, before she began her musical career. Some five years ago she obtained a divorce and while studying in Paris married Norman Mason, an architect and singer of this city. In June, 1917, Mr. Mason brought suit for divorce in Boston, the action following the suit of Mrs. Clothilde Polacco against Giorgio Polacco here. The first Mrs. Polacco returned to her Milan home two years ago.

Mr. Polacco married his first wife, the daughter of a wealthy Milan banker, early in his career in Italy. Later he conducted some of the first presentations of Wagner's music in that country. He has been conducting in this country upward of eight years, and came here to share the Italian repertory with Toscanini. He was born in Venice and conducted opera in Milan, Genoa and Rome, Petrograd and Moscow, Buenos Aires, Rio Janeiro, Havana, and Mexico City.

MRS. G. S. MULLINER DIES.

Leading Woman Lawyer Had Aided in Many Legal Reforms.

Mrs. Gabrielle Stewart Mulliner, a practicing lawyer for the last nineteen years, died Saturday night in her apartment at Hotel Netherland. Born in Cleveland, Ohio, Oct. 24, 1872, daughter of Professor N. Coe Stewart and Gabrielle Townsend Stewart, now of Flushing, L. I., Mrs. Mulliner attended the Ohio State University Law School, being admitted to the bar there in 1900. Coming to New York, she soon became one of the most successful women lawyers in the city. She was active in securing passage of the law creating a separate court for the trial of domestic relations cases, and for the trial of women under arrest in a Women's Court. This was her work as Chairman of the Legislative Committee of the New York State Federation of Women's Clubs.

Mrs. Mulliner was a member of the New York County Lawyers' Association, the Equal Franchise Society, Women's Republican Club, National Civic Association, National Society of Patriotic Women, Daughters of Ohio in New York, and Manhattan Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution, and was also State Parliamentarian of the D. A. R. She was the author of "New York Laws of Interest to Women."

She was the wife of Walter G. Mulliner of Leamington, Warwickshire, England, whom she married in September, 1904. While Mrs. Mulliner approved of the law as a profession for women—if a woman must earn an income—yet she strongly recommended the home and the nursery. "A cradle is more interesting than a letter-file at the end of a day," she said, "and no client can be so desirable as one's own husband."

The funeral will be held Wednesday morning at 11 o'clock at Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church.

The New York Times, in its leading editorial yesterday, said:
"It is to practical tasks that men now turn, and they are gigantic. * * * The service to which men are now summoned is comparable in its worth and nobility to the great service rendered by the soldiers in the field."
One kind of service to which we are now summoned—one of the greatest of all—is to furnish decent homes to our own people, who lack them because war's exigencies have for several years checked and practically stopped home building.
Let us repair the wastes of war, but let us fit ourselves to do this by giving our people decent homes to live in. Efficient work depends not so much on working conditions as on living conditions. Scarcity of homes means higher rents, doubling up to meet expenses, lowering of standards of living, and lessened efficiency.
The housing crisis extends to all parts of the country, but it is more acute in the larger cities, and most acute in New York City. Here our people live mostly in tenements, and if the housing crisis is to be met more tenements must be built.
More tenements and good ones—but that is not enough; good management is as essential as a good building for the development of self-respect, efficiency and decent citizenship among tenants.
The City and Suburban Homes Company now houses 15,000 people in its model buildings. At present construction costs, it can house 96 families for $250,000 in buildings occupying less than 40 per cent. of the lot, each apartment having a bath and each room plenty of light and air.
The furnishing of new homes to meet the present housing crisis here in New York is a service to which those who have funds to invest are summoned.
The Company's past record and the limitation of its stock to 5 per cent. dividends is its guarantee against rent profiteering.

WILLARD SUSTAINS SLIGHT PUNCTURE OF AN EYEBROW IN MIXUP WITH MONAHAN

WILLARD GETS CUT OVER EYE IN BOUT

Monahan Clips Jess on Brow in Training Set-to and Opens Flesh for About an Inch.

THE INJURY IS NOT SERIOUS

Great Crowds Watch Champion and Challenger in Practice Goes—Rules May Favor Challenger.

Special to The New York Times.

TOLEDO, Ohio, June 29.—A mild sensation stirred the big crowd which jammed Champion Jess Willard's training camp at the Casino on the Muddy Maumee this afternoon when Sergeant Walter Monahan clipped Jess with the heel of his glove over the eye and inflicted a cut thereon which stopped the bout temporarily. Willard and his sparring partner were going at it pretty fast when Walter brought around a right swing. Jess didn't duck quickly enough and the lacing of Monahan's mitt broke the skin just above the left eye.

There must have been nearly 5,000 spectators inside the canvas enclosure when Jess was at work. He had gone three rounds with Jack Hempel and had put a lot of speed into his work before Monahan came into the ring. Jess went at Walter faster than he boxed with Hempel. He allowed Monahan to come in close to hammer his body and then drove him out of range with right and left upper cuts. One of these smashes sent Monahan over on his haunches but didn't hurt him.

It was in this same first round that Monahan clipped the champion over the eye. When the crowd saw signs of blood there was quite a wave of excitement. The cut is about an inch long and isn't very serious. The fight fans who favor Dempsey tried to exaggerate the importance of the cut. They buzzed around, telling what a bad thing it was to get cut at this period, with the fight only a few days away.

Many overemphasized the importance of the cut, pointing out that it would be a shining target for Dempsey's wallops on July 4.

Shows His Condition Is Good.

As a matter of fact, some of the old-time trainers pointed out a significant comment on Willard's condition as a result of the cut eye. It bled very little. One of Jess's handlers brushed the blood away with a towel and after shadow boxing a bit Willard boxed two more rounds with Monahan.

Veteran conditioners of athletes say that the fact that the cut bled only a little shows that Jess is in fine condition. If he was soft and fat and undertrained, as so many insist he is, even a slight cut like this would bleed freely.

Willard's work was short, but he was active every second he was in the ring. Jess appears well satisfied with his condition. As the day of the big fight approaches the champion is more alert and serious about his work.

Spectators swarmed about to get a peek at Dempsey at his Overland Club home. The Dempsey quarters are half a mile up the bay road from the casino, and the highway was almost impassable with autos and pedestrians.

Dempsey's boxing was light today. Jimmy DeForest watched him like a cat and made him play on the defensive most of the time. He boxed two rounds each with Bill Tate, the Jamaica Kid, and Jock Malone. In the first round of his bout with the Jamaica Kid Dempsey couldn't restrain himself and gave the darkey a wallop which almost sent him out through the ropes.

Dempsey finds it hard to pull his punches. He strains at the leash and is aching to cut loose. Tate was very cautious, and acted much startled when he saw Dempsey come at him head down and with jaw set.

Dempsey wrestled more with his sparring partners today. He pulled at their arms, and when they tried to hold him tight in the clinches he bore them down with the sheer power of his shoulders. Several times he got Tate's arms so ... tied up that Bill couldn't move them.

Must Break Cleanly in Clinches.

Dempsey partisans pointed out today that the Toledo boxing rules, which will have to be enforced by Referee Ollie Pecord, will favor the challenger. The contestants must break cleanly at the command of the referee. During their training bout both Willard and Dempsey have delivered telling blows while fighting out of the clinches. According to the referee, this will not be permitted on July 4. The rules specifically provide that the boxers be permitted to box a reasonable length of time in the clinches, with one arm free, but they must break cleanly at the referee's order. The kidney punch is prohibited here under the rules.

Breaking cleanly from the clinches should save Dempsey from having Willard sprawling all over him, if the champion should decide on such tactics to wear his opponent down. It is not likely, however, that either Willard or Dempsey will adopt this style of fighting. Both are too active, and will have to crowd as much fighting as possible into a bout of short duration in order to gain a decision. Pecord says there will be no unnecessary hugging and holding, and that every minute will be a minute of action. No loafing tactics are going to be allowed.

Pecord's announcement that the rule to break clean will be strictly enforced will necessitate tactics on the part of each boxer different from those which each has been using against sparring partners. Pecord will call a meeting of the two boxers within the next day or two and go over the rules carefully. The judges will also be present at the conference.

The fact that the champion has been accused of violating all the established rules of training for a championship bout isn't bothering Willard. He says that he knows his own condition best and that he has conditioned himself for this bout according to his own judgment. Willard doesn't think it necessary to train for a twelve-round bout in the same way that he trained for the contest with Johnson, in which the limit was forty-five rounds. Willard is shrewd and cagey and his friends have confidence that he will not risk his title by failing to make himself fit for the ordeal.

Say He Has Worked on Quiet.

"I have my own methods," says Jess, "and whether I win or lose no one will be to blame but myself and I will have to pay the bills. No man knows better about Jess Willard than I do myself. I know what agrees with me and what does not. I know just how much I can stand and have worked according to my own judgment."

It is whispered about that Willard has done more work than he has shown in the ring at his casino camp. While he has not done any running on the road, it is stated that he has taken other forms of exercise in the quietness of his own place and that he isn't fooling himself about being fit.

Dempsey is a striking favorite in this bout, not in the betting, but as far as public opinion goes. Willard is not popular. He is not a hand-shaker and avoids the plaudits of the crowd as much as possible. He is not in the good graces of the fighting public because he has commercialized his title and will not fight any heavyweight who comes along. Willard has fought only thirty minutes since he won the title from Johnson four years ago. That was the fight of ten rounds with Moran in New York. Willard is a poor mixer, and has made fighting a business and nothing else. He says that he never wanted to be a fighter, but saw an opportunity for making a lot of money and became a made-to-order fighter.

Comment On Current Events In Sports

The Great Fight.

The heavyweight boxing championship of the world, the title de luxe of pugilism, is at stake this week in Toledo, Ohio, when the newest sensation of the fighting game, Jack Dempsey, will engage in a twelve-round glove contest with Champion Jess Willard. The challenger is only 24 years old, but has gained a wide following because of a fearless, aggressive style and his ability to hit hard. Dempsey has gained a great reputation as a knocker-out. He tears into an opponent like a young cyclone and has finished many of his victims in jig time.

The record of Dempsey, however, is not so impressive when the rating of his opponent is taken into consideration. His one-punch knockout of Fred Fulton paved the way for him to meet Willard. Dempsey is immensely popular with fight fans. He is young, is fired with ambition, and has received countrywide publicity of a most flattering kind.

Admitting all of the pleasant things which may be said in Dempsey's favor, many obstacles loom up in the challenger's path to the world's title. Nature has endowed the champion with many advantages which other fighters have never had. When they come together on July 4 in the ring at Bayview Park Willard will have an advantage of between forty and fifty pounds in weight, nearly six inches in height, and more than five inches in reach. These few facts alone are undeniably impressive. As far as good judges of condition can tell, Willard, a man who has always taken the best of care of himself, is in good physical condition even at the age of 37.

The flashy, theatrical stunts of the training camps are not to be given too much weight in the rating of the two fighters. There is a vast difference in boxing against second and third rate sparring partners and fighting a real opponent. Willard's appearance is deceptive. He is so big that he does not look as if he has trained fine enough. An athlete of such mastadonic proportions as the champion, at the age of 37, cannot train down to a point where his huge body could look as trim and fit as the perfect physical makeup of Dempsey. The challenger is trained down close to the point of perfection. An impressive bronze figure of an athlete of ancient Greece is the first thing one thinks of when they look at Dempsey.

Dempsey's style of fighting shoves the art of defense into the background. He works on the belief that his overwhelming attack is the best defense possible. Jack believes that if he forces the fighting all the time Willard will have no chance to strike back. Fine ring logic if it works, but foolish if it fails. There is a fortune in store for Dempsey if he wins.

Popular fancy leans toward Dempsey to win this fight. It seems impossible on the face of it. Willard seems far too strong, too big, and too clever at protecting himself. It will probably be the champion's last fight. He wants to retire with a clean record. He is the shrewdest business man who ever held the heavyweight title or any other title. He is a great money fighter.

Weighing Willard's advantages at their true worth, it does not seem possible that even Dempsey, with his bulldog courage and his tiger-like attack, will be able to break through the defense of the Pottawatomie super-scrapper.

The irrepressible strength and stamina of youth are in favor of Dempsey. If the ravages of time have so cut down Willard's power from what it was a few years ago, the challenger's crushing attack may find a chance for full play. It does not seem as if Willard's massive frame could have developed a serious weakness in such a short time without there being some striking indication of the loss of power.

For Certain Tennis Clubs.

E. B. Moss of the Associated Press contributes to the new Manual for Tennis Umpires, published by the U. S. N. L. T. A., an article on "Publicity for Tournaments" which may well set some of the club committees thinking. For a long time it was considered proper for tennis players to affect an attitude of disdain toward all newspaper publicity, and the presence of reporters at tournaments was barely tolerated. Later, however, it was discovered that the development of the game could be significantly accelerated by an intelligent distribution of tennis news, and, with the appointment of Paul B. Williams as Field Secretary for the national association, some real co-operation with the daily papers was made possible.

But with the best efforts on both sides it is still a difficult matter to publish the tennis news to the complete satisfaction of players, fans, and athletic reporters alike. The daylight saving law, while unquestionably a boon to every form of Summer sport, has added another problem to the troubles of the editor, who must have his sporting page ready for the morning editions by 11 P. M. With half a dozen tennis tournaments going on simultaneously, as is frequently the case this season, it is impossible to gather all the news in any other way than by telephone. The regular tennis reporter can be present at only one or two events in the course of a day, and he is forced to select those matches for detailed comment which seem of the greatest importance. Semi-finals and finals, or startling upsets, are necessarily given the preference, with due regard for the titles at stake and the quality of the entries.

In order to secure adequate representation in the daily tennis news the clubs themselves must take the initiative and assist the papers in every way possible to secure reliable information. While this season has brought to light a helpful spirit in many quarters, there have also been far too many instances of gross carelessness, the mislaying or false reporting of scores, often by club stewards, who were completely ignorant of tennis, and even at times a strangely shortsighted refusal to accommodate the seeker after information. There is still some slowness in grasping the obvious fact that if a tennis club wants members and prestige it can secure both through publicity for the tournaments given under its auspices, and at the same time aid considerably in the spread of tennis enthusiasm. The best results can be obtained only if a member of every tournament committee is given the definite responsibility of supplying the newspapers with all necessary information, both before and during the event. His will be a hard and confining task, but when it is over he will have the satisfaction of having performed a real service to his club and to the game of tennis in general.

Our Manhattan 'Nines.

For the first time in several years New York baseball fans are giving serious thought to the possibility of a world's series between the Giants and the Yankees. New Yorkers do not often envy Chicago, but Gothamites have always envied Chicago baseball fans because in 1906 they had a world's series between the two major league clubs in the Windy City. It is the only instance where the major leagues have played the classic in the one city.

During the last couple of weeks the Yankees for the first time have loomed up so brilliantly that even conservative judges of the game admit that Huggins's players have a chance. The pitching of the Yanks has been stronger than even the most optimistic had hoped for, while the batting ability of the New York players has been the biggest kind of a pleasant surprise. Peckinpaugh is at present leading the American League in batting. It seems strange to American League fans to see any one but Ty Cobb or Tris Speaker at the top of the batting list.

The remarkable pitching and heavy hitting of the Yankees offset some of their shortcomings, and if these two features of their play hold out, there is some reason in the belief that the Ruppert-Huston combination may come through. The White Sox and the Indians seem to be the clubs that they will have to be beat, and the Yanks have surely held their own in the games with these clubs thus far. The Boston Red Sox seem to have lost the spark of championship ambition, and where formerly they were alert and on their toes, they are now indifferent and slipping.

In the National League it will be surprising if the Giants do not capture the flag. Not that it is going to be an easy matter, for Chicago and Cincinnati, and even Pittsburgh and St. Louis, are likely to make the going rough for McGraw's men before the season is over. New York, nevertheless, has a club which looks strong enough to more than hold its own.

The possibility for an exclusive world's series at the Polo Grounds depends on how the Yankees behave when they go into the West again. They had a successful invasion the last time, but Chicago and Cleveland will give them more trouble next time. To win, Huggins would have to keep them at fighting pitch all the time. At times the Yanks play as if there wasn't much fighting spirit in them. But their work during the last few weeks of the present season has dispelled this idea as a fallacy. The talent is evidently there. Whether Huggins will be able to direct this talent so as to bring forth its true worth is a question. If he does, New Yorkers will not have to move out of their own backyard to see the greatest baseball show on earth.

The Dealers in Speed.

It is not a far cry backward to the time when mankind's idea of spectacular speed was expressed in the phrase, "a mile a minute." It is such a short cry, indeed, that even persons not yet antique recall the period when that expression carried its thrill. Today only the tortoises of earth and of air are satisfied with such a leisurely gait. Compact little high-powered edifices on wheels flash about a banked track at double that speed, and winged structures are propelled above the clouds at the same rate.

There's nothing common or commonplace yet, however, about "two miles a minute." It takes the highly trained, steel-nerved specialists to control the destinies of the machines capable of clipping off miles in thirty seconds each. There are already more speedmasters in the air than on land. The war attended to that development. The really great drivers of racing automobiles are few. Most of them will be seen at Sheepshead Bay on Friday, streaking about the highly banked speedway arena in what is doubtless as great a test, not only of speed, but of nerve, daring, muscular control, as mankind can compass.

"Spectacular—hair-raising," some persons comment, "but not utilitarian." That's what the same persons were saying about the development of fleetness in aircraft a few short years ago. Of course, the criticism in the one case is as true as in the other, and no truer. Every contest of expert drivers of cars is actually another step toward perfection in the construction of motors—and there are few things more important than that.

Overcrowded Clubhouses.

The local racing associations have put themselves to considerable effort and expense this season to provide a fine brand of sport and to add to the comfort of their patrons, but the unusually large attendance, which has been greater than was anticipated, even with a return to something like normal conditions, has created a problem which must be solved soon in fairness to those who pay the highest price for their entertainment. It is quite evident that the officials will have to make some arrangement, which will enable the clubhouse patrons fully to enjoy the privileges for which they pay an extra fee.

The object of the clubhouse is to provide a certain degree of exclusiveness for those who wish to avoid the crowds in the stands and on the lawn. In recent years, since the return of racing in this State, the accommodations at the local tracks have proved sufficient. The price for the clubhouse comforts was made high enough to prevent a general rush for the tickets, and those who paid were satisfied.

However, the clubhouse no longer provides exclusiveness. The number who have been willing t pay for that privilege this season has been so great that the clubhouse is just as much a seething mass of humanity as the stands and lawn, and those who pay the additional price that they may not have to be jostled about have received little added comfort for their money.

The total cost for the clubhouse privilege, including surtax, is $8.80, and should bring some added benefit to the purchaser. But, despite the fact that the accommodations at the clubhouses at all the local tracks are limited, there has been no attempt made to limit the sale of admissions. On Saturdays, holidays, and other days when big stake races are run, the crowds in the clubhouses have made it impossible for one to move about without discomfort. It has been like struggling in a subway rush to get into the circle where the layer of odds holds forth.

Some improvements were made at Jamaica, but these proved inadequate, and even at Belmont Park, which has the most spacious clubhouse of all the local tracks, the evil has been evident all season.

Some racing men have suggested that the remedy is to limit the sale of admissions. This apparently is the only way the problem can be solved without building larger structures. It has been suggested that a limited number of admissions be put on sale after the season tickets have been disposed of so that overcrowding be avoided. This could be done with fairness to all. It would be a case of first come first served, and would result in real benefit to those who do gain admission.

The Suggested New Tourney.

A number of local professional golfers are very strongly advocating a tournament which would be closed to professionals outside the metropolitan district. This is being urged upon the golf officials as more or less of a protective measure, and is not without some good argument in its favor.

The movement is really designed to develop those pros who have sprung up on local links and who have not had the opportunity or good fortune to make an impressive showing in tournaments in which the cream of the country's players compete. They argue that a so-called closed tournament would give many players a chance to capture a tournament, and thus gradually develop until they could command some prestige in competition with the better known stars.

There are a certain few professionals in the country now who can be depended on to be the leaders in any tournament they enter. The lesser lights are continually being pressed back by these stars in open competitions, and so it is not to be wondered at that these latter want to limit the entries.

There is always a lot of public interest in tournaments in which the stars compete, and the desire to make up good cards has caused the bars to be let down. But, no doubt, interest would soon develop in a more limited tournament which would bring out new winners, and there would soon be new names to add to the list for national competitions.

GRAND PRIX IS WON BY GALLOPER LIGHT

Classic of French Turf Run for First Time Since 1914—Ovation for Clemenceau.

PARIS, June 29. (Associated Press.)—The Grand Prix de Paris, the turf classic of France, run today at Longchamps for the first time since the outbreak of the war, was won by the English horse, Galloper Light, owned by A. de Rothschild. The odds against the winner were 5 to 2.

The Grand Prix was this year worth 231,000 francs to the winner.

The great crowds that have attended the principal racing events this year were surpassed by the vast throngs that gathered at Longchamps for what was called the first "Grand Prix of Peace." M. Poincare was in the President's stand, and Premier Clemenceau also was present, for the first time in many years.

As soon as the Premier entered the gate afoot the people rushed from all corners of the paddock, yelling lustily. The cheering was taken up in the stands as M. Clemenceau appeared in the President's box. Then the field, black with people, joined in the prolonged ovation, until the "Tiger" was forced to advance to the front of the stand and bow his acknowledgments.

The sport as well as the crowd was markedly interallied. American, British, Italian, and Greek owners were represented in the great race.

In the absence of Vanderbilt's crack, McKinley, second-rate French horses were beaten by what was looked upon as a second-rate English horse. The British made a triple winning of the Grand Steeplechase, the Grand Hurdle Race, and the Grand Prix.

The previous Grand Prix de Paris at Longchamps was run on June 28, 1914. It was on that day that Archduke Francis Ferdinand and his wife, the Duchess of Hohenberg, were assassinated at Sarajevo. The news of the assassination reached the racetrack, where President Poincare, the Cabinet Ministers, and the members of the Diplomatic Corps occupied the official stand. The Austrian Ambassador left the racecourse immediately.

Soldiers to Have Fight Bulletins.

Soldiers and sailors in hospitals and camps will have a ringside closeup of the Willard-Dempsey fight from preliminaries to finish. The Knights of Columbus are arranging for a ticker and bulletin service by an expert sport writer to hospitals, camps, and K. C. community centres throughout the country while the fight is actually in progress. In New York the service will be installed in Greenhut's, Polyclinic, Fox Hills, and Gun Hill Road hospitals.

MAYBELLE V. FIRST IN 235-MILE RACE

Wins Tenth Annual Cruise of New York Motor Boat Club to Albany and Return.

Maybelle V., owned by H. C. Vaughan, won the tenth annual long-distance race of the New York Motor Boat Club when she chugged across the finish line off the clubhouse, at the foot of West 147th Street and the Hudson River, at 7 o'clock yesterday morning. The course was from the clubhouse to the railroad bridge off the Albany Yacht Club and back to the anchorage of the New York Motor Boat Club. The distance was 235 nautical miles.

Four power cruisers started on the race, being sent away by E. LeRoy Finch, chairman of the regatta committee, at 7 o'clock on Friday evening, June 27. Besides Maybelle V., the starters were Kitty C. II., owned by C. Carlson; Sea Horse, owned by J. S. Mallard, and W. C. Deane's Lady Bird.

In the night run to Albany, Maybelle V. and Kitty C. II. kept well together, the latter turning at the Albany mark at 1:40 P. M. on Saturday. Maybelle V. was six minutes astern. Coming home, Kitty C. II. drew away from Maybelle V. and had the race well in hand when engine trouble off Poughkeepsie caused the boat to stop. When Maybelle V. reached the disabled Kitty C. II., H. C. Vaughan offered to call off the race. After a delay of an hour and a half it was decided that Maybelle V. should continue, as one of the other boats was seen coming down the river.

As she had a handicap of four hours nineteen minutes and fifty seconds, Maybelle V. won on both actual and corrected time. Her actual time for the course was thirty-six hours. Owing to the bad weather on Friday night and Saturday morning, not a single one of the open power boats started.

RANI WINS CLOSE RACE.

Mallory's Yacht Takes Arrow Class Event by Two Seconds.

Special to The New York Times.

GREENWICH, Conn., June 29.—In the race among Arrow class yachts sailed over the Indian Harbor Yacht Club's five-mile course today Clifford D. Mallory's yacht Rani was the winner. She crossed the finish line just two seconds ahead of the Hawk, owned by Ralph E. Slaven.

H. N. Whittelsey's Salome won the second race of the afternoon in the Indian Harbor one-design class. Weather conditions were ideal for sailing and the yachts made some good records over the course, due largely to the stiff breeze, which shifted from north to northeast.

HANDICAPS ARE TOO BIG FOR TITTERTON

Crack Distance Runner Finishes in Ruck in Two-Mile Race at Singer A. A. Games.

Frank Titterton, newly crowned Metropolitan A. A. U. junior two-mile champion, failed yesterday in his first start since winning the title, to concede handicaps to rival distance runners. Titterton, allotted fifty yards, was virtually the scratch starter in the two-mile run at the annual games of the Singer Employes' A. A., held at Bennett Field, Elizabethport, N. J.

Against a field of twenty-five rivals Titterton was unable to overcome the leads of his fleet rivals, although he strove hard to cut down the liberal handicaps. At the finish the local junior champion was in sixth position. The race was won by J. O'Connor, who started with an allowance of 175 yards. His time was 9:45 4-5.

The other junior champions competed, but with greater success than Titterton. They were Frank Conway of the Morningside A. C., who took the 100-yard dash, in which he had an allowance of one yard, and E. Weatherdon of the New York A. C., who captured the running high jump with a leap of 5 feet 9 inches.

The sports were witnessed by a crowd of about 5,000. Plenty of thrilling races were furnished with the large fields in the track events, and close finishes drew the applause of the large crowd frequently. This was particularly so in the medley relay race in which the Paulist A. C. quartet registered a victory.

TEAMS MAKE NEW 880-METER RECORD

American and Canadian Relay Teams Lower Time—Robert Simpson Wins High Hurdles.

PERSHING STADIUM, France, June 29, (Associated Press.)—The stadium was crowded at the opening of the interallied games today. Before the contests began Colonel Wait Johnson of the Games Committee received the decoration of Officer of the Legion of Honor and Lieut. Cols. Goodrich, Lonergan, and MacDermott and Elwood F. Brown of the Young Men's Christian Association were made Chevaliers.

The world's record for the 800-metre relay was broken twice today. In the first heat the American team covered the distance in 1 minute, 33 1-5 seconds, followed by the teams representing Australia, Italy, and Rumania. Immediately afterward the Canadian four equaled the Americans' time, and were followed by France, Belgium, and Greece. The new record beats the old by 2 4-5 seconds.

Both finishes brought the 30,000 spectators cheering to their feet. The American team was composed of Paddock, Haddock, Torkelson and Teschner. The Canadian runners were Howard, Halfburton, Zoellin, and Johnson.

Robert Simpson of the United States won the final in the 110-meter high hurdles event. Wilson of New Zealand finished second.

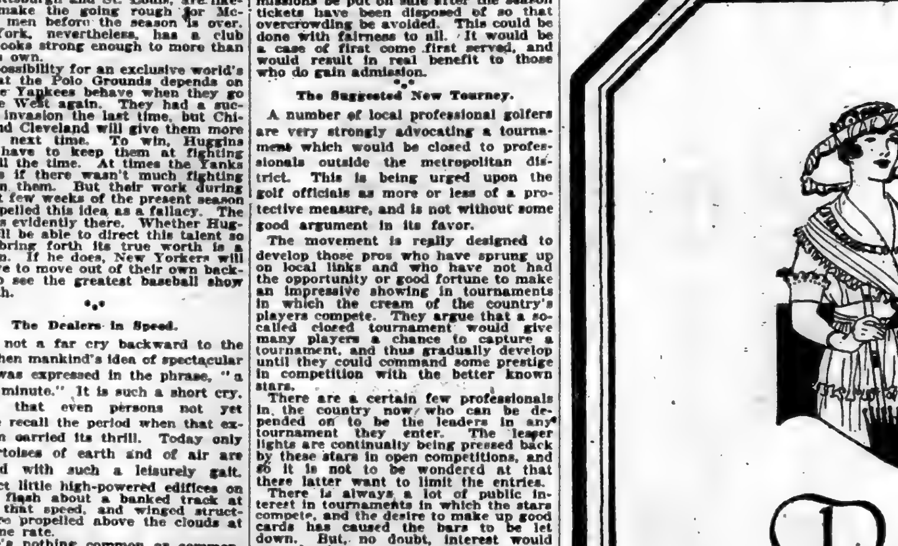
Simpson's time for the 100-meter hurdles was 0:15 1-5, one-fifth of a second slower than the world's record. Butler's running broad jump was within .041 meter of the former Olympic record, beating the French record by over half a meter.

The first Englishman to compete in the stadium ran third in his heat of the 400-meter run today and qualified for the finals. In the finals of the running broad jump Sol Butler of the United States made 7.557 meters, Worthington of the United States 7.26, Johnson of the United States 6.69, and Kebdell of New Zealand 6.553.

All the American entries in the 400-meter run—Edby, Spink, and Grey—qualified for the semi-finals, winning their respective heats. They were slower, however, than Devaux of France who won the second heat in 0:52 4-5.

America snowed France under in the basket ball match, 93 to 6. The Americans' advantage in height, reach, and team play, told from the start of the one-sided contest, which was loudly cheered by the doughboys who filled the bleachers.

Private Sol Butler, American Army, who won the trial in the running broad jump, was cheered loudly when he stepped up to the box of the King of Montenegro, after his success, to receive from the King the medal of the Fourth Class of the Order of Danilo. The grin on the husky negro's face was ear-wide as King Nicholas patted him on the back, after shaking his hand.



PREPARATIONS for the coming holiday probably include a replenishing of one's Haberdashery requirements. The suggestions here published should prove of interest. They are the recommendations of the largest Haberdashers in America.

YANKEES TRAIL THE RED SOX MEEKLY UNTIL FINAL INNING AND THEN STAGE A FUTILE RALLY

RED SOX HAVE FUN WITH YANKEE TEAM

Visitors Enjoy Pleasant Sabbath Until Ninth, When Locals Rise for Wild Instant.

YANK REVOLT STOPS EXIT

Fans Start to Leave, Then Stop in Hope of Seeing What Didn't Happen—Score, 5 to 3.

The Yankees spent more than two hours at the Polo Grounds yesterday without handing out one lone thrill to a crowd of 22,000 fans. Then, with hundreds outside the park and thousands on their way to the exits, the Huggins maulers came out of the ether and kicked up a fuss that suddenly turned a hitherto quiet throng into a bedlam. But the rally, which developed after two were out in the ninth, did little more than make the score respectable, and give the fans an opportunity to cut loose. The Red Sox took the ball game by a score of 5 to 3.

The uprising in the ninth by the Yanks was along the same order as the wild swing of a fighter on the ropes. Up to the final inning second base had been the dead line for the Huggins base runners, and few of them traveled as far as the midway. Then, after Baker had grounded out to start the ninth, Lewis got around to second when Gilhooley muffed a fly ball through fear of a collision with Scott in short left field. Pipp followed with a fly to Gilhooley, leaving only one more out to finish the ball game, and the rush for the exits, which had been slow up to this time, suddenly took on new vigor.

The score at this time was 5 to 0 and the fans were about resigned to a shut out. Del Pratt broke up that idea when he connected with a fast one and drove the ball to deep right centre, where it fell between Roth and Hooper for a triple, scoring Lewis with the Yankees' first run. Ping Bodie, who had hit into the left field seats in the second game Saturday, duplicated the stunt with Pratt on third base and two more runs were cashed in to the credit of the Huggins herd. The fans, all but asleep in their seats, suddenly acquired some interest in the proceedings. When Truck Hannah lashed a single to right the vision of a tie score took hold of the crowd. Then Frank O'Doul took a swing for Mogridge and Frank's third swing closed the old ball game.

Jones the Deliberate Fools Yanks.

Waiting for Babe Ruth to toe the plate was about all the interest the crowd worked up in the first eight innings. Samuel Jones, the slowest worker in the box since the days of Slow Joe Doyle, had the Yankee sluggers helpless from the opening frame to the ninth. The home team made a good start in the first, Vick and Baker both getting singles, but Sam did some base running with his chin resting on his chest and ran into an easy out, which killed any chance of run getting. After that Jones had the Yanks hitting into the air, and the lead which the Sox picked up in the first two frames never was seriously threatened.

Babe, like the Yankees, finished strong. He fouled to Pipp in the first inning, grounded to Pratt in the third, and hit one a mile high in the fifth which Peck smothered in short left field. In the eighth, with two strikes against him, the Boston slugger got the hit which helped to decide the game. It whistled past Pipp like a bullet, sent Roth from first to third, and earned Babe a single. Roth and Ruth both scored in this inning and the finish found these two runs separating the Yanks from the Red Sox.

Huggins gave George Mogridge his first opportunity to start a game since May 25, and the veteran side-wheeler pitched better ball than the score would indicate. An error by Pipp on Gilhooley's slow roller was responsible for the run scored by the Red Sox in the first inning, and a misplay by Peck presented the Sox with one of the two runs scored in the second frame. The eighth, which produced four hits and two runs for the visitors, was the only inning in which Mogridge was hit to any extent. Two runs of the Sox, like the three scored by the Yankees in the ninth, were made possible by loose fielding.

Vitt Raps for a Double.

The champions did not waste any time in getting a run across. Gilhooley opened the game with a slow roller along the first base line, and Pipp, in his hurry to get the ball and beat Gil to the bag, lost both. Vitt, whose batting and fielding throughout the game stood out like the lighthouse on a moonless night, spanked one of Mogridge's slants to left field for a double and Gilhooley scored. It was hit-and-run play, and Gil was almost at second when the crash came. That ended the scoring for this inning, as Mogridge grabbed Hooper's attempted sacrifice and nailed Vitt at third.

In the Yanks' half of the first Vick shot a single to right, Pack fouled out, and Baker hit a Texas Leaguer to left. Gilhooley had the ball before Vick was ten feet beyond second, but Sammy was traveling with his lights dimmed, and he was an easy out.

Then the Sox picked up two more runs. Schang greeted Mogridge with a line smash to left and stole second. He rested there while the next two batsmen were retired, and raced in when Jones hit to left centre for two bases. Sammy crossed the plate when Peckinpaugh allowed Gilhooley's roller to keep on rolling to the outfield.

The crowd had been advising Huggins to take Mogridge out during those first two innings, but had little chance to repeat the advice. A double by Jones and a scratch single by Vitt were all the hitting done by the visitors from the second frame to the eighth. With one out in the eighth, Roth lined a single over second and Ruth put him on third with a single to right. Schang scratched a hit off Peck's glove and Roth scored, Ruth halting at second. Scott shot a single into right and Ruth came over with Boston's last run.

After Wickland had batted for Mogridge to no avail in the eighth inning, Allan Russell went to the hill and he disposed of the Red Sox in order. The crowd, regarding the game as hopeless from a Yankee standpoint, were pulling for Ruth to get a chance at some right-hand pitching, but Russell did not give Babe his opportunity.

Peckinpaugh got his daily hit in the third inning, a double to the right-field wall. It was the seventeenth consecutive game in which the Yankee shortstop has batted safely. In the eighth he had another hit on its way when Oscar Vitt bobbed up as if on springs, got the high bounder, and threw Peck out at first. Vitt had furnished the fielding feature of the game in the fifth when he lunged toward short and bagged Vick's tabasco smash in his gloved hand. Vitt led both clubs with the stick, getting a double and a pair of singles.

CURVES AND BINGLES

Sam Jones batted on the system of two or nothing. He doubled on his first two trips and fanned on the next two.

Captain Harry Hooper raced in from centre field during the Yankees' rally in the ninth, conferred with Manager Barrow, and then Bill Lamar went to right field. Bobby Roth had sprung a charley horse while chasing Pratt's triple.

The Yankees and Red Sox close their series with a double-header this afternoon, starting at 1:30 o'clock. Shawkey and Quinn will do the pitching for New York. Ruth and Caldwell are the Red Sox pitching probabilities.

Al Wickland still is a maiden as a Yankee hitter. He got his seventh chance yesterday when he batted in the eighth for Mogridge. He lofted a fly to Hooper.

Ping Bodie should split that box of stockings with Gilhooley. Ping will collect the hosiery for hitting a home run, which would not have been possible if Gil had not dropped Lewis's hoist in the ninth inning.

Ruth drove one ball out of the park, but it was a foul. In the eighth Babe hit one a mile high, and it went over the second deck of the big grandstand.

The Yankees and Red Sox have played to more than 100,000 persons in four days at the Polo Grounds this season.

Yesterday's crowd of 22,000 was the smallest these clubs have played before in New York this year.

Peckinpaugh needs at least one hit in each game today to set a major league record for the season. Southworth of the Pirates ran his consecutive hitting streak through eighteen games, and Peck has gone through seventeen contests.

The defeat of the Yanks did not affect the standing, as their two close rivals—the White Sox and Indians—were defeated in the West.

Manager Ed Barrow of the Red Sox rises to complain about the report that Jack Barry was the cause of dissension in his club. It is an injustice to Jack, says the Boston boss, who insists that his team is, and was, one happy family.

Jones tugged his trousers, caressed the ball, and went through so many other motions before delivering the ball to the batsmen that the first two innings took up forty-five minutes.

Baker made two fancy stops in the sixth, the first on Schang and the second on Shean, retiring each runner at first base.

Ping Bodie galloped to the daisy patch in deep centre for Roth's thump in the first inning and robbed Bobby of a triple.

WASHINGTON, June 29.—Johnson had the better of Naylor in a pitching duel today and Washington won, 1 to 0, thereby making it three straight over Philadelphia. Foster's triple over Strunk's head and Rice's infield hit in the first inning accounted for the only run of the game.

ROBINS POUND BALL AND DEFEAT PHILS

Konetchy Leads Attack on Quaker Boxmen with Five Hits in 9 to 4 Victory.

Big Ed Konetchy contributed his mite of a triple and four singles in five times at bat, his mates drove out ten more bingles for full measure, and Brooklyn could not help winning the game from the Phillies, 9 to 4, at Ebbets Field yesterday.

Three of the big first sacker's hits scored runs, and he crossed the pan twice during the course of the contest, which was studded with errors and loose playing. Cravath, getting some of the spirit of the hitting bee into his system, drove out a triple in the eighth, after he had failed to get a hit off Smith for three successive appearances at bat. The Phillies were not bashful about hitting either and secured nine clouts off Sherrod Smith.

Packard, who started on the mound for Philadelphia, could not stand the racket of Dodger hits, so Woodward was sent in to replace him in the sixth inning, with two on bases, with Smith on first and Olson on second, and the score standing 3 to 2 in Brooklyn's favor.

Philadelphia started scoring in the second, after Luderus, the first man up, had fanned. Baird drove a single to left, and Sicking followed with a hit, which advanced Baird to second. Cady lifted a fly, and Myers threw home instead of playing for third, allowing both men to arrive safely at second and third bases. Packard's clean single to left field scored Baird, and the inning closed when Whitted poled a fly to Myers.

Zack Wheat opened the sluice gate of Brooklyn's hitting stream, and started the second inning with a double which skimmed along the first base line, bounding to the corner of the field. He moved to third when Myers grounded out. Konetchy made his hitting début, sending a single over second, scoring Wheat.

A pretty double in the third squelched a possible score by the Phillies. Pearce, who was playing short, having exchanged positions with Sicking, singled to center, and Meusel flied out to Myers. Cravath, who has been suffering a batting slump since he visited the Ebbets romping ground, hit a grounder to Johnston, who tossed Pearce out at second, and then doubled back to first, catching Gavvy. With the score one all in the fourth, Luderus's knee collided with a pitched ball and Dave Bancroft, who was cutting antics around first base coaching line, helped him to first. He recovered in time to go to second on Johnston's boot of Baird's bounder, and traveled home on Packard's single.

Smith started the fifth inning by grounding out, Luderus to Packard, who was covering first. Olson poled one out to left, stole second, ambled to third when Johnston hit to short centre, and came home on Griffith's liner between first and second base. Zach Wheat, evidently believing that the Philly infield would follow the motto that lightning never strikes twice in the same place, drove a single through the same spot, and Johnston scored from second, Griffith going to third. Myers drove a hot liner to Packard, which surprised the pitcher as much as the spectators, and Wheat was doubled off first.

Konetchy drew his third hit of the contest, when he picked a spot midway between third and left field in which to drop a single, and went to second on Ward's sacrifice. Miller lifted a long single to Whitted, who muffed the ball, which continued to make little rings of dust all the way to the fence. In the meantime Miller followed Konetchy around the bases, and after the rumpus was over and the smoke cleared, the Dodger catcher was declared out for failing to touch second base in his tour of the circuit.

The Phillies picked the seventh inning, with its proverbial good fortune, to even the count, and secured two runs on a triple and a single. Whitted sent a hot liner to Olson, who could not handle the ball, and landed on first. He moved to second when Griffith muffed Pearce's drive, but was forced out at third when Meusel hit a bounder to Ward. It was at this point, with men waiting on first and second, that Cravath came back with his triple, scoring two runs, and making the count four for both sides.

The seventh held a bigger charm for the Dodgers, and in their half of the frame Robbie's youngsters heaped up three runs. Griffith opened the inning unauspiciously by flying out to Whitted, but Wheat drew a ticket to first, and went to third when Myers singled to centre. A wild heave by Woodward scored Wheat, Myers going to third, and then Konetchy thought it was time to get another hit, so he drove a single to left, scoring the Dodger centre fielder. Ward bunted, but Woodward threw the ball away, and Konetchy moved his big frame to third, while Ward was safe at first. Figuring that Miller was more dangerous than Smith, Woodward walked him. Smith, however, poled a fly to centre, scoring Konetchy; the inning ending when Cady got under Olson's foul.

The Phillies were not able to even the count in the remaining innings, the men going down in the well known one-two-three style. Brooklyn, however, added two more runs in the eighth. Johnston opened the hitting party by singling to left, but was forced at second on Griffith's grounder to short. Wheat dropped a well placed Texas leaguer to short centre, Griffith drawing up at third, and scoring on Myers's fly to right. Not satisfied with having gleaned four singles in four times at bat, Konetchy drove a long triple to centre to satisfy his hunger for hits, and Wheat found plenty of time to come home. Ward knocked a fly to Luderus, completing the inning and the scoring.

NEWARK JARS THE ORIOLES.

Bears Take Two Games from Fast Baltimore Team.

By winning a double header at Newark yesterday, Patsy Donovan's Newark Bears stopped the Baltimore Orioles for the first time in a month by taking a series, three games to one. Baltimore had climbed into first place, and had won sixteen out of twenty games without dropping a series until Newark spoiled the record.

Dick McCabe had an easy time as the Newark players batted hard in the first game and gave him a good lead, winning 9 to 4. In the second game Pat Shea held the Oriole sluggers to five tame hits and won 8 to 2. Fritz Maisel was spiked in the first game and had to be relieved.

CARDS POUND SIX PITCHERS

Get Twenty-two Hits and Defeat Reds, 14 to 9.

CINCINNATI, June 29.—St. Louis forced Cincinnati to use six pitchers today, and most of them were hit hard, the visitors accumulating twenty-two safe hits for a total of twenty-nine bases and winning the game, 14 to 9. Doak was knocked out of the box in the first inning and Sherdel was hit hard, but finished the contest.

CHALLENGER FAILS TO DETHRONE HALL

Middle States Tennis Champion Successfully Defends Title Against Beekman.

Walter Merrill Hall successfully defended his title of Middle States champion at the Orange Lawn Tennis Club yesterday afternoon, defeating the challenger, Leonard Beekman, 6—4, 6—3, 6—2, 4—6, 6—2. A new pair of champions appeared in the doubles, when Ichiya Kumagae and Harold Throckmorton won from last year's title-holders, Dr. William Rosenbaum and E. A. Clarke, in straight sets, 6—3, 6—3, 11—9.

The women's Middle States title also changed hands, Mrs. Homer Stuart Green being unable to defend, and letting the honor go by default to Miss Helene Pollak, who defeated Miss Florence Ballin in the final round of the tournament, 6—1, 7—5.

Beekman attained the position of challenger in the morning by a straight-set victory over Frederick C. Baggs, 6—3, 6—1, 6—3, while the new doubles champions eliminated the Princeton brothers, Philip and Ludlow Van Deventer, at 6—4, 8—6, 6—3, before entering the challenge round. It was a full day of tennis for South Orange, even with the women's doubles and mixed doubles omitted, owing to the interruptions of rain late in the week.

It is a tradition that the challenge round of the Middle States championship should go to five sets, and Hall and Beekman fully lived up to it yesterday. They went at each other hammer and tongs, both realizing that only speed and brilliancy could win, and each trying to settle every rally as quickly as possible. As a result the tennis was spectacular from the start, although two or three sets were often sufficient to decide a point. The players generally preferred to lose by an error rather than win by elaborate court tactics, and throughout they traded the most vicious drives and volleys with scarcely a dull spot in the match.

The young Princetonian was the more brilliant at the start, and put the opening set to his credit after a bitter struggle. Hall then struck his stride, and tore through two sets at top speed, with victory seemingly already in his grasp.

But Beekman came back with renewed strength after the seven-minute rest, and stuck grimly to his task until he had squared the match with another 6—4 session. The rubber found both players on the verge of exhaustion, and it was chiefly through superior endurance that Hall was able to claim the final honors. There was no let-up in the terrific hitting, but neither of the contestants was able to keep his court covered in the steady fashion displayed earlier in the match. Hall maintained his accuracy to the end, and by driving the ball continually out of his opponent's reach he quickly gathered the winning points.

The doubles were a more one-sided affair, Kumagae and Throckmorton forming an irresistible combination. The steadiness of the Japanese left-hander spurred his partner on to produce the most sensational shots in his repertoire, and between them the two burned up a world of speed. Rosenbaum and Clarke made a gallant struggle in the third set, which ran to 11—9, but could not quite break through. The Van Deventers also ran one set up to deuce games in the preceding final, but this was the limit of their success.

Beekman smothered the chops of Baggs in the singles final, and allowed him only seven games in three sets, while Miss Pollak's hard hitting proved too much for Miss Ballin, although the latter made a good stand in the second set and almost succeeded in tieing up the match.

SURPRISES IN TENNIS TILTS.

Great Field Gets Away in North Side Title Tourney.

Two players, Henry H. Bassford and Paul Martin, reached the round before the semi-finals yesterday afternoon in the north side championship at the University Heights Tennis Club, while rapid progress was made all through the big draw, the tournament committee sternly defaulting all delinquents. Several upsets were features of the day's play, one coming in the morning, when O. G. Garbe of Staten Island broke through the strong volleying game of H. R. Hathaway after dropping the opening set. Garbe hit hard all through the match and gradually succeeded in steadying his shots sufficiently to pass his opponent at the net with fair consistency.

There was another surprise in store for the gallery when Jones W. Mersereau, Chairman of the local committee, took the court against Herbert H. Manchester, also of the home club. Manchester was uncertain of his driving from the start, and had the greatest difficulty in winning the opening deuce set. Mersereau was using his chop with deadly effect, and volleying whenever possible, and, by drawing Manchester in close, he found that he could lob over his head, or at least force him into errors. By these tactics he quickly squared the match at 6—1, and went right after the rubber in earnest.

Manchester fought hard and the rallies were long and desperated. Leading at 5—3, Mersereau was several times within a point of the match, but each time his steady rival pulled it out of the fire, and eventually brought the games to deuce. Here Manchester had his chance, for Mersereau lost his next service and was all ready to crack under the strain. But some costly errors overhead kept him in the game, and ultimately he succeeded in turning the tables and putting the set to his credit at 8—6.

An unfortunate accident to H. W. Schwarz, who sprained his ankle in going after a deep lob, forced him to default to Sigmund Spaeth after the latter had run into a lead of 2—1, with a 6—2 set to his credit. The doubles event is scheduled to begin tomorrow afternoon.

CHAMBERS WINS AT TENNIS.

Defeats Gwynne, 6—3, 6—4, in Nassau Country Club Event.

Two more matches were played in the invitation tennis tournament at the Nassau Country Club, Glen Cove, yesterday afternoon. Charles Chambers, the former Brooklyn champion, made his début on turf for this season, winning a first-round match from F. W. Gwynne at 6—3, 6—4, his short serving proving even more effective than on clay.

In the only doubles encounter of the day C. C. Pell and H. Carleton defeated I. Martin and C. M. Bull, Jr., 6—1, 6—2.

WILCOX TO GET FLIER FIT.

Will Tune Up His Whirlwind Car Today for Race with De Palma.

Howdy Wilcox, winner of the $50,000 Indianapolis auto classic, will start tuning up his famous blue Peugeot land flyer today at Sheepshead Bay in preparation for his match race against Ralph De Palma, which will be one of the features of the great card of speed contests which will be decided at the Sheepshead Bay Speedway on July 4. The major event of the card is the 100-mile derby in which De Palma, Wilcox and the other leading drivers of the world will strive for the rich purse offered by Manager James J. Johnston.

The Peugeot which Wilcox piloted to victory in the 500-mile Indianapolis race has arrived here under guard. This land flyer cost close to $40,000, and is a real marvel in motor construction. It is the most expensive racing machine ever turned out, and in tests over the Indianapolis course has attained a speed of more than 130 miles an hour. When this Peugeot and De Palma's ponderous Packard get warmed up next Friday the fastest race in the history of the auto race sport is anticipated. Motor engineers from all over the country will be on hand to witness this test of supreme speed.

The 100-mile Derby has attracted a remarkable card of pilots, the large purse offered having brought response from all over the country.

De Palma and Wilcox will confer with Richard Kennerdell of the contest board of the A. A. A. this afternoon. At this conference all details for the match race will be arranged. Wilcox wants the race decided in one thirty-mile sprint, but De Palma is holding out for three ten-mile heats. It is probable that the latter will be the final arrangement.

There are now twenty drivers at the Bay course tuning up for the elimination trials tomorrow. Veteran racing men predict that every machine will attain a speed of more than 115 miles an hour in these tests.

WESTERN GOLF TITLE PLAY.

Will Be Held July 23-25 at Mayfield Country Club, Cleveland.

CHICAGO, June 29.—Official announcement of the Western open golf championship, to be held at the Mayfield Country Club, Cleveland, July 23-25, was issued today, opening the event to all professionals and amateurs throughout the world. The title is now held by James Barnes, professional at Sunset Hill Club, St. Louis, who won it in 1917 at Westmoreland Club, Chicago. There was no competition in 1918.

NEWBURN SPEEDWAY VICTOR

Barone's Trotter Defeats Bessie Baron in Straight Heats.

A. Barone's bay stallion trotter, Newburn, scored its second victory in as many weeks yesterday in the sixth Spring matinee of the Road Drivers' Association on the Harlem Speedway. In doing so, Newburn vanquished Gene Carpenter's champion of last year, Bessie Baron, in straight heats. The trotters clashed in the 1:06 class.

Newburn took the first heat from A. Bruno's Gunfire in 1:06, with Bessie Baron taking third place. In the second heat Carpenter kept his trotter up in front for the greater part of the half-mile brush, but when Newburn came strongly near the judge's stand Bessie Baron was forced to take second position, with Gunfire third. The time for the second heat was 1:08½, giving Gunfire second ribbon, because of the fact the gelding finished second in the fastest heat.

During the running of the first heat in this race a runaway enlivened the proceedings, but did not cause any damage. A bay mare hitched to a pleasure vehicle near the finish posts became unruly as the trotters were nearing the end of the first heat and dashed off at a mad clip. The frightened animal smashed the cart to which it was attached before being brought under control.

VOSHELL RECOVERS LONG ISLAND TITLE

Beats Fred Anderson, Jr., in Final Round of Tennis Tournament at Kings County Club.

S. Howard Voshell of Brooklyn, is again tennis champion of Long Island by virtue of his victory over Fred Anderson, Jr., 6—3, 6—4, 6—3, at the Kings County Club, yesterday afternoon. Voshell also acquired a share in the doubles title, paired with the father of the Anderson family, himself many times a Long Island champion of the past. This combination disposed of the West Side team, Ralph J. Gatcomb and Dr. E. W. Davenport, in a straight set final, 6—3, 6—0, 6—4.

Although Voshell has been playing far too much tennis lately, and had seemed stale all week, with two narrow escapes from defeat, he managed yesterday to come close to the form which has already won him so many titles. He had had a taste of young Fred Anderson's prowess with the racquet when they met recently in the Metropolitan-Bronx county tournament, and he obviously intended to take no chances with the superhuman reach of the Long Islander. From the start he placed the ball with the greatest accuracy, poking it with his peculiar short swing wherever the smallest openings presented themselves, and making it impossible for his opponent to volley successfully. Voshell's service also proved a deadly weapon, bounding high to Anderson's back-hand, and being usually good for a killing shot at the net, if not an ace or an error.

In the doubles Voshell was even more brilliant, hitting terrifically overhead, with admirable support from the steady veteran at his side. Gatcomb and Davenport were overwhelmed by this combination of speed and court tactics, their usually dependable game going to pieces in the face of the continuous bombardment.

The summary:

Long Island Championship.

Singles.—Final Round—S. Howard Voshell defeated Fred C. Anderson, Jr., 6—3, 6—4, 6—3.

Doubles. — Final Round—Fred G. Anderson and S. H. Voshell defeated R. J. Gatcomb and Dr. E. W. Davenport, 6—3, 6—0, 6—4.

SEVEN ARE INJURED IN AUTO COLLISION

Hold City College Pupil for Reckless Driving After Crash on Mosholu Parkway.

TWO TAKEN TO HOSPITAL

Force of Impact Throws Passengers Into the Roadway—Both Cars Are Damaged.

George B. Besbir, a City College student, whose home is at 950 East 180th Street, was arrested early this morning and locked up in the Bronx Park Police Station charged with the reckless driving of an automobile after his machine had collided with a car driven by William Watkins of 233 North Railroad Avenue, Mount Vernon. In the accident seven persons were injured, two of them so badly that they were removed to the Fordham Hospital for treatment.

The accident occurred at Mosholu Parkway and Perry Avenue. The car driven by Besbir crashed into Watkins's machine, both being damaged and the persons in them thrown out from the force of the impact. The car that Besbir was driving belongs to A. L. Cohen, his brother-in-law, of 1917 Daly Avenue, the Bronx.

Yesterday afternoon Besbir borrowed the car, taking with him Miss Lillian Hirschhorn, 18 years old, of 2,065 Belmont Avenue, the Bronx, and Miss Jeanne Lazarus, the same age, of 633 Willoughby Avenue, Brooklyn. These two girls were the persons most seriously injured, both of them suffering from numerous lacerations and contusions, and Miss Hirschhorn suffering a fractured left arm.

Besbir protested against his arrest, and declared that the accident had been unavoidable, and was not due to reckless handling of the machine he was driving. The police, however, took a different view of the matter and made the arrest.

Besbir will be arraigned before a City Magistrate this morning.

BREAK IN VANCOUVER STRIKE

Car Men and Municipal Employees Return to Work.

Special to The New York Times.

VANCOUVER, B. C., June 29.—Streetcar men having voted by a small majority to return, the full service will be in operation tomorrow. Municipal employes surrendered at discretion yesterday night. The men hope to adjust the seniority and discrimination claims with the unions later through the mediation of the fire and police forces, who did not strike.

The disintegration of the striking forces has been marked by the first outbreak of violence, volunteer workers on the waterfront being set upon by pickets last night and beaten up.

The longshoremen, taking pity on the crew of the Makasay, so long exiled in a prohibition port from the public houses of Sydney, agreed to unload the cargo of mutton which has tied the steamer up here for a month. Altruism at 80 cents an hour excited suspicion in other strike circles and the concession was canceled. The crew, who will allow nobody but longshoremen to touch the mutton, therefore will remain here a little longer.

SEND GREETING TO SOVIETS.

Workers' International Industrial Union Also Aid Winnipeg Strike.

With delegates present from all parts of the United States and some from Canada, the twelfth annual convention of the Workers' International Industrial Union began yesterday morning at the Hungarian Workers' Hall, 350 East Eighty-first Street. The session will continue for two or three days. Aside from the adoption of a resolution sending greetings to the Soviets in Russia and Hungary and the taking up of a collection for the defense of strikers arrested in the Winnipeg labor troubles, the day was devoted to organization and the hearing of reports.

Among other features scheduled for today are lectures by Adolf S. Carm on "Finances in Labor Unions" and Karl Dannenberg, temporary editor of The Industrial Union News, the official organ of the W. I. I. U., who will speak on "The Press and Its Relation to the Labor Movement."

Seventy unions, with a total membership of about 8,000, are represented at the convention. W. W. Cox of St. Louis was made Chairman and H. Richter of Detroit, Mich., is Secretary and Treasurer of the convention. In his annual report Mr. Richter gives a review of the work of the year and emphasizes the principles of the W. I. I. U.

"The Russian proletariat," he says in his report, "has aroused the admiration of the oppressed and exploited peoples in every country. Their ability to respond to the emergency of a crisis in their country, with ability and organization, considered impossible before, is an inspiration and a promise for real progress everywhere. Other European countries have been forced to seek recourse from the breakdown of the old order by following the path blazed by the militant wage slaves and peasants of Eastern Europe. America, formerly more or less isolated, has been drawn into the world vortex. Australia, Asia, and even Africa give evidence that the time has come when world conditions shape and fashion the circumstances of everyday life of the peoples of every clime.

"The I. W. W. trial and the record of that organization in general," Mr. Richter continues, "as well as the slogans of 'Mass Action' and 'Dictatorship of the Proletariat' activity, are manifestations that indicate the need for increased education along W. I. I. U. lines. The pro-capitalist old-line organizations of the A. F. of L. type are seething with discontent, but the leash is held tight in these craft unions by the labor lieutenants and the political bosses of the master class. To educate the rank and file is the route to freedom for their toilers; all pretensions of change by the old craft unions are confined to externals mainly; it will not bring the relief the sincere craft unionists expect. The old concepts and practices must be discarded and the class position of wage workers adopted as the basis for activity, industrially as well as politically, to lead to emancipation and industrial democracy."

WIGWAM TO HEAR WOMAN

Miss McCrystal Will Speak at Tammany's Fourth Celebration.

The program completed yesterday for the Tammany Hall Fourth of July celebration at 10 o'clock in the wigwam in East Fourteenth Street provides for a woman speaker, who will be the first of her sex to take an active part in these ceremonies in the history of the organization. Governor Alfred E. Smith will read the Declaration of Independence. The "long talks" are to be delivered by United States Senators Henry F. Ashurst of Arizona and Pat Harrison of Mississippi, and Representative Claude Kitchin of North Carolina. The "short talks" are scheduled for Miss Elizabeth McCrystal, one of the women leaders of the organization; District Attorney Francis Martin of the Bronx and Assistant District Attorney Alexander I. Rorke of Manhattan.

Grand Sachem John R. Voorhis, who will celebrate the ninetieth anniversary of his birth within a few days, will welcome the braves and squaws. Women members of the organization are expected from every assembly district.

Preceding the ceremonies at the hall there will be a parade, headed by thirteen Grand Sachems in full regalia, to Union Square for a patriotic demonstration around the Liberty Pole. The 69th Regiment Band and the Tammany Glee Club are to close the celebration with "The Star-Spangled Banner."

REGULARS PREPARE TO QUIT THE RHINE

First and Second Divisions, the Last to Leave, Hope to Be Out of Germany by Aug. 1.

COBLENZ, June 28, (Associated Press.)—Homegoing activities began in earnest among the troops in the area occupied by American forces as soon as the news that the treaty of peace had been signed was received this afternoon.

In Luxemburg the 5th Division was prepared to entrain as soon as final orders came, and in the bridgehead area, where the 1st and 2d Divisions and part of the 3d have been concentrated since last week, when it appeared that the Germans might balk at the treaty, preparations began immediately for moving back to quarters in villages and barracks where for six months the soldiers had been garrisoned.

This movement will require only two or three days. Then the 1st, 2d, and 3d Divisions will make themselves comfortable while awaiting orders which will eventually take them home. According to present plans, the 5th Division will begin moving toward Brest on Tuesday and the 4th Division on Saturday or Sunday. The date of the departure of the 3d Division has not been announced, but it is expected to follow the 4th.

It is understood that both the 1st and 2nd divisions will be out of Germany before Aug. 1, but much will depend upon transportation facilities on the French railways. It is reported here that if the American flag is to remain on the Rhine, with a regiment or possibly a smaller unit as part of the permanent army of occupation, this unit will consist of volunteers who were recruited in America and recently arrived in France. Nothing is known here definitely whether the American flag will remain on the Rhine.

ELLENBOGEN A CANDIDATE.

Ex-Assemblyman Seeks Republican Nomination for Municipal Justice.

Ex-Assemblyman Abram Ellenbogen announced yesterday that he was a candidate for the Republican nomination for Municipal Court Justice in the Fifth Judicial District, which extends from Sixty-fifth Street to 110th Street, between Central Park West and Riverside Drive.

Mr. Ellenbogen served five terms in the Assembly continuously, and was Chairman of important committees, including the Committee on General Laws and the Committee on Religious and Charitable Institutions. During the last four years he has been a member of the Joint Legislative Committee created to work out a plan to simplify civil practice in this State. The work of this committee has just been completed. Mr. Ellenbogen took an active part in the deliberations which led up to the enactment of the present Municipal Court Code.

EXPLOIT SERVICE MEN.

Bigelow Says Some Bureaus Take Advantage of the Jobless.

Major Warren Bigelow, Director of the Re-employment Bureau for Soldiers, Sailors, and Marines, 505 Pearl Street, said last night that some private employment agencies were taking advantage of soldiers, sailors, and marines who are badly in need of work. He said that one accountant, who called at the Bureau Saturday, was offered a job paying $75 a week, provided he paid the commission, amounting to a week's pay, in advance. The soldier didn't have the fee and is still seeking work. A bookkeeper related a similar experience.

Major Bigelow urged that all the employers in New York City give practical aid to former soldiers, sailors, and marines by sending word to the Bureau when they had places open and emphasized the fact that no fee is charged either the employer or applicant. Through the efforts of vocational advisers of the Bureau many ex-service men, formerly clerks, are being induced to change their vocations, and results so far indicate that they not only receive better wages but get more personal satisfaction out of their work.

FACE GREATEST COAL SHORTAGE IN HISTORY

Production Must Increase 25 Per Cent. to Avert One, Says Expert.

CHICAGO, June 29.—Government coal production figures point to "the greatest coal shortage in history" next Winter unless production is stimulated immediately 25 per cent. or more throughout the nation, according to a statement made public today by F. S. Peabody, Chairman of the National Coal Association's special committee dealing with the prospective shortage.

"The information gathered by the committee is that at the present rate of production one industrial plant out of every eight in the United States will have to shut down next Winter for lack of coal," said the statement, which attributed the falling off in production to the extremely low demand.

The bituminous coal shortage of 65,000,000 tons for the first twenty-four weeks of 1919 must be wiped out and production increased 30 per cent. the remainder of the year to meet the nation's requirements of 550,000,000 tons, according to the statement.

CUBAN SOLDIERS KILL 5 VOODOO WORSHIPPERS

Negroes Charged With Murder of Girl Tried to Escape After Mob Stormed Jail to Lynch Them.

HAVANA, Cuba, June 30.—Five alleged negro voodoo worshippers held in San Severino Prison, at Matanzas, on a charge of complicity in the murder of a little girl were shot and killed tonight by soldiers when they attempted to escape while being removed from the prison to a place of greater safety after a mob had attempted to storm the castle for the purpose of lynching the prisoners.

Two members of the mob were killed and eleven injured when the soldiers fired on the would-be lynchers a couple of hours earlier.

Matanzas is said to be greatly excited, and further trouble is feared.

MANUFACTURERS TRUST COMPANY

MEMBER FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM

takes pleasure in announcing that

BEGINNING JULY 1, 1919, it will receive on deposit from old and new customers, OUT-OF-TOWN CHECKS, PAYABLE THROUGHOUT THE UNITED STATES, WITHOUT CHARGE FOR COLLECTION; or in other words, eliminate the exchange charge for collection of checks, which is now prevalent.

Many New York merchants have thought it advantageous to maintain out-of-town bank accounts for the purpose of securing free collections. MANUFACTURERS TRUST COMPANY now offers to such depositors the opportunity of securing the same privilege in our own City. The only reservation we make in this connection is, that compensating balances must be kept and where accounts prove to be unsatisfactory or unprofitable, a monthly service charge will be made.

We have never before offered to accept on deposit ALL out-of-town checks at par, free of exchange, and would not make the offer now to new customers without extending the same privilege to all old friends.

We believe that New York business men are entitled to all the privileges and benefits at home that other cities can confer, and that our action is also distinctly in line with the trend of the times towards the establishment of universal par collections.

We solicit business on the new basis at all of our offices.

LEAGUE FOES TRY TO UNITE ON PLAN

Senate Opponents Seek Common Ground on Which to Attack Covenant.

COMPROMISE IS EXPECTED

Radical and Conservative Anti-Ratification Elements Are Drawing Closer Together.

BORAH NOT IMMOVABLE

Prefers a Clear-Cut Issue on the Treaty, but Will Support Drastic Qualifying Resolution.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, June 29.—While saying he was willing to vote for a drastic qualifying resolution that would put under reservation any points in the League of Nations covenant to which its opponents in the Senate object, Senator Borah of Idaho today told THE NEW YORK TIMES correspondent that he preferred the fight on the covenant be made on a clear-cut issue of acceptance or rejection.

Mr. Borah would accept the challenge, as he called it, that President Wilson has made to the Senate to accept the covenant as it stands. He wants the fight in the Senate conducted on that basis. If it is, he believes it would be defeated. If the foes of the League agree to support a qualifying resolution, he demands that it be drawn so as virtually to amend the covenant.

"I will not vote for an innocuous qualifying resolution," he said. "I would support one that would keep the United States out of Europe and keep Europe out of the United States."

Senator Hitchcock, ranking Democrat on the Foreign Relations Committee, said that opponents of the League need not fear that the issue will not be sharply drawn.

"The President asks the Senate to accept the covenant without change," he said. "It will be. In talking of a qualifying resolution opponents of the League are wasting time. A qualifying resolution worth anything would amend the covenant, and that the Senate is not going to do."

Mr. Borah's attitude is not so far apart from that of Senators who favor qualifying resolutions as it was a week ago. The Borah-Johnson-Poindexter wing among the League opponents, conservative leaders say, can swing into line on a qualifying resolution without prejudice to the radical position they have taken.

Senator Lodge and other conservative leaders will confer with the Borah-Johnson-Poindexter forces this week in an effort to unite the elements which, in the last twenty-four hours, appear to be heading toward compromise. These leaders believe that the only safe road to travel, if they are to win their fight, is by the qualifying resolution route. With ultra-conservative Senators like McCumber of North Dakota, McNary of Oregon, and Capper of Kansas expressing willingness to vote for reservations of various sorts, Senator Lodge is hopeful of a solidified front of opposition.

"As it stands," said one conservative tonight, "the opponents of the covenant are not widely divided. For some days an effort has been under way to agree on some method to pursue in the opposition. The details of policy to be worked out constitute no insurmountable barrier."

Expressing his desire to see the fight on the covenant made the issue of acceptance or rejection, Senator Borah said the President had drawn the issue himself.

"I should like to see the issue simplified in that way," said Mr. Borah. "League or no League, is the issue the Senate ought to have before it. I would like to have that issue put to the American people by referendum vote, to see how they stand. I would like them to decide this question: Do you want to enter into a partnership with the nations of Europe, Asia, and Africa, or do you prefer to live your lives as you have lived them for the last 150 years? I would ask them to decide whether they wanted Europe meddling in American affairs, or if they wanted American affairs conducted on an American basis exclusively. I do not propose to be caught in a reservation trap which would permit the terms of reservation to be construed by the Council of the League of Nations, sitting at Geneva.

"The treaty with Germany is an imperialistic treaty. It violates the sacred law of neutrality. It does violence in at least a half a dozen instances to the principle of self-determination. It is founded on fraud and injustice in the case of Shantung. Let the issue be simple. Let it be determined if the American people are to underwrite and guarantee that kind of a treaty."

The battle on the League of Nations will not be precipitated, it is understood, until near the end of next week. Senate leaders think the treaty may be delayed in reaching the upper body until after the President returns to Washington.

The resolution offered by Senator Fall of New Mexico to declare a state of peace to exist in advance of ratification, so that commercial intercourse may be resumed with Germany and Austria-Hungary while the Senate is considering the treaty, will come up in the Foreign Relations Committee tomorrow. Leaders doubt that definite action will be attempted by the committee now. Senator Lodge, Chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, favors the resolution, but not all the Republican members are inclined to support it, while the Democrats are solidly against it.

"The Fall resolution will be killed by the Senate if the committee votes it out," said Senator Hitchcock. "It violates the constitutional method of declaring peace, which is through proclamation of the President. It is doomed, if reported out, to go the way of the resolution of Senator Knox, which has been abandoned."

WASHINGTON, June 29, (Associated Press.)—Senate activities in connection with the Peace Treaty and League of Nations are expected to be virtually suspended until the President submits the treaty, although many Senators plan to discuss treaty issues in Fourth of July speeches, and Senator Gerry, Democrat, of Rhode Island, will speak tomorrow in support of the League Covenant.

Republican leaders tonight claimed further progress toward cohesion of those objecting to the treaty while its supporters expressed growing confidence in final ratification.

The Republican leaders, it was stated authoritatively, plan, first, amendment of the treaty in four principal features—to eliminate Article X. of the League of Nations, to protect further the Monroe Doctrine, to eliminate domestic questions from the League's jurisdiction, and to provide for withdrawal from the League without unanimous consent.

If balked in amendment, the opposition, it is said, will try to make reservations to these ends in ratification.

BISHOP CHIDES SENATORS.

Says Yearning Desire of People of America Is Behind League.

BETHLEHEM, Penn., June 30.—In a baccalaureate sermon to the graduating class of Lehigh University, held in Packer Memorial Church today, Bishop Ethelbert Talbot made a strong appeal for the League of Nations and commented on those who "in the United States Senate would nullify the decisions reached after months of arduous labors in Paris and shatter the whole fabric there erected as the future basis of the world's hope and security."

"Today," he said, "the whole world stands expectant upon the eve of peace; peace for which it has longed, and for which millions of lives have been offered up. In the presence of such a fervent and world-wide hope and expectation, how it makes us blush with shame that in the United States Senate, where we should least expect to find it, are heard the voices of men who would delay peace and prolong the war. They would, if they could, detach the United States from all concerned with the peace and happiness of the rest of the world, and have us repudiate all the responsibilities we have assumed in the war—responsibilities which by our part in the conflict have given us such an unique place of leadership in the world, and have endowed us with such a glorious heritage.

"But they will not succeed in their efforts. The great party with its noble traditions, which they so misrepresent, refuses to be placed in an attitude of hostility to a purpose so beneficent and so world-wide, and which has behind it the yearning desire of the American people."

French To Give Our Soldiers A Book on Their Co-operation

PARIS, June 29.—The French Government is preparing a volume giving the record of American co-operation during and after the war.

A copy of the volume, the Temps says, will be given to every American soldier who served in France.

DENIES PEPPER'S CHARGE.

League to Enforce Peace Declared to be Financed by the People.

Herbert S. Houston, National Treasurer of the League to Enforce Peace, in a statement issued last night said that the charge made by George Wharton Pepper at Carnegie Hall on Saturday night that the League was financed by a group of international bankers, was without foundation.

"From the day the League was formed in Independence Hall, four years ago, it has been financed by the people who believe in the League of Nations, he said. "Our books show, as our auditors can tell Mr. Pepper, that we have over 3,000 contributors and that the average contribution has been considerably below $100. No movement in this country has ever received a more broadly democratic financing than has the League and the reason is, of course, that no movement has ever had a more broadly democratic support than the League.

"From the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, which ratified the referendum in favor of the League of Nations by an overwhelming majority three years ago, to the American Federation of Labor, which has just adopted a supporting referendum by a vote of 29,000 in favor to less than 600 opposed, the League has received the greatest popular indorsement that the American people have given to any cause in years.

"In the State of Mr. Pepper's Carnegie Hall colleague, Senator Reed, nearly every Democratic member of the Legislature called upon the Senator to resign, agreeing to resign themselves, and submit the whole question to a referendum with the voters of Missouri, but the Senator, with a discretion and caution most unusual with him, declined the challenge.

"The president of an important Massachusetts college has just written to the League to Enforce Peace that Senator Lodge would be hopelessly defeated and his leadership discredited if a referendum on the League Covenant could be submitted to the voters of his State. The truth is that over a thousand referendums on the League of Nations have been taken in the United States in as many organizations, political, labor, religious, agricultural, women's and business, and there is not one in which the vote has not been 100 to 1 in favor of the League."

URGE SUPPORT OF LEAGUE.

New Haven Republicans Send Message to Brandegee and McLean.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., June 29.—At a convention of Ninth Ward Republicans it was voted to send a telegram to United States Senators McLean and Brandegee of Connecticut to support the Peace Treaty with the League of Nations included. The two Senators are opposing the League.

The text of the telegram was as follows:

Resolved, That it is the emphatic opinion of the Republicans of the Ninth Ward of Thirty of New Haven, in conclave duly assembled, that the Senators of this Commonwealth of Connecticut be respectfully requested to support and ratify the treaty of peace as subscribed this day at Versailles by the President of the United States of America.

ED. J. MARONEY.

The ward is composed largely of munition workers, and contains 4,500 voters, one of whom is ex-President Taft. Colonel Isaac Ullman, President of the New Haven Chamber of Commerce, moved that the telegram be sent. He said:

"I think that when a question of the peace of the world is at stake, our Senators should have nothing to do with partisanship. Mr. Wilson raised the question of partisanship first. The people answered him by electing a Republican Congress, but let us forget that Wilson is President and remember that the treaty cannot be unscrambled. Never was there a document that meant so much for the worker as the document embodying the League of Nations. It may not be perfect but it is what our fathers dreamed of. If it needs amending, it can be quietly amended. I believe that if the treaty, including the League of Nations, is not ratified by the Senate, the war will have been fought in vain."

PRAISES PEACE LEAGUE

But Lynch Says He Wishes the Covenant Was Stronger.

Dr. Frederick Lynch, who was a member of the Committee on the League of Nations in Paris, spoke last night before the Public Forum of the Church of the Ascension, and said that, while the covenant was a compromise, it should be accepted by the United States as being far better than anything that had ever been given to the public.

Referring to the dissatisfaction expressed in some quarters with the provisions of the League, he pointed out that America's delegates were not the only ones who had a hand in framing the covenant or the peace pact, and that there were reactionary forces at work that could not be overcome in every instance.

"I would like to have seen the League more democratic," said Dr. Lynch. "I would even like to have seen the delegates elected by the people. But I would rather have a league of good Governments with high ideals than the old system, even though a better way would be to have a league of people. I wish it were a little bit stronger, but I am glad we have got what we have."

SAYS SENATE WILL RATIFY.

Senator Harrison Predicts Acceptance of Peace Treaty.

Speaking at memorial services for Newark's soldier dead in Branch Brook Park, Newark, yesterday, Senator Harrison of Mississippi predicted that "the Peace Treaty will be ratified by the Senate by a splendid majority." He declared that "the people are for it and when the people are for a thing it doesn't matter much what Senators and representatives think." Abram I. Elkus said:

"It is a peace to which no one has objection except a few whose objections have no sound foundation. Peace is signed, but there are still more things before us. We owe to our soldiers that we shall find for them a suitable place and influence. Our President, too, will return to carry out his principle of the right of self-determination of small nations. It is our duty to further this. Ireland, too, may get freedom."

STATES IN RACE FOR FEDERAL ROAD AID

Pennsylvania in a Single Month Gets $1,444,697 Under Law to Encourage Highways.

ILLINOIS TAKES $818,222

Roads to Cost $29,861,957, with Mileage of 1,443, Provided For in Thirty-Day Period.

The alacrity with which the States of the Union are accepting the Federal Government's offer of financial aid in certain approved road building and improving projects gives promise that within a few years America will have the best roads in the world, and there will be few large communities or populous regions that will not be easily accessible to automobiles and motor trucks the year round. The fact that Federal aid is not given to purely local projects nor to those wherein the specifications do not insure permanence, stability and quality of construction suitable to heavy traffic insures that all these roads will be of service permanently to the nation as a whole, not only for its pleasure and commercial traffic, but for military purposes should the need ever again arise. The Highway Engineering Bureau of the Department of Agriculture, which investigates these State projects, and passes upon their merit before Federal aid is allowed, has just finished its examination of applications made in April and finds that all past records have been surpassed. For example, the projects approved from one State, Pennsylvania, call for Federal aid to the amount of $1,444,697.54 in the building of nine roads having an estimated cost of $2,516,028.69. A single project in Illinois approved will cost $1,636,445.50, and will receive $818,222.75 of Federal money. An Allegany County (Maryland) project approved, for a concrete road 4.68 miles long, will cost $56,817 a mile. These facts emphasize the conclusions arrived at from a study of the March record, that the people have decided to build roads to handle the traffic demands, that the great road-building program predicted for this is in progress, and that more attention than ever before is now paid to the construction of through highways. Approved statements and agreements together called for $9,550,371.20 of Federal aid for roads having an estimated cost of $29,861,957.93. The number of projects was 174, as against 150 in March. The mileage was 1,443.76 as against 1,270.13.

The increases over the March record are: Number of projects 24, mileage 173.63, estimated cost $3,302,347.89, Federal aid allowance $2,819,732.13.

The statements approved during the month were 120, with a mileage of 923.53. The estimated cost of this mileage was $16,261,326.51, as against $14,425,114.87 for the projects approved in March, and by far the largest amount yet reached in a monthly record since Federal aid for roads became an accomplished fact. The Federal aid allowance for these projects was $7,528,550.68, an increase over that for the previous month of $2,006,393.96.

Agreements for fifty-five projects were signed by the Secretary of Agriculture. All but one were for projects approved in previous months. The Federal aid allowed for these projects was $2,039,614.99, and the estimated cost of the roads $4,626,415.48.

The total Federal aid agreements executed up to May 1, 1919, number 535, with a mileage of 4,624.83. The estimated cost amounts to $39,059,327.44, and the Federal aid allowance to $15,614,929.61.

In five States the cost of the new projects approved will be in excess of $1,000,000, while in six other States the estimated cost runs from $576,000 to $908,000. The Federal aid allowance in these States runs from $290,000 up, in four of them being more than $500,000. In several of them the agreements executed greatly increase the estimated cost and the amount of Federal aid for projects which were considered during the month.

The Pennsylvania projects mentioned, which in their estimated cost and Federal aid allowance so far tops the record for all the States to date, have an aggregate mileage of 57.81, and nearly all are for concrete roads.

These States follow in the order named in the relative cost of the roads involved in the approved contracts: Georgia, 16 projects, 103.91 miles, estimated cost $1,837,446.21, Federal aid $873,182.05; Illinois, a single project, 65 miles long, estimated cost $1,636,445.50, Federal aid $818,222.75; Ohio, 7 projects, 35.36 miles long, cost $1,241,677.02, Federal aid $387,600; Connecticut, 1 project, 32.1 miles, estimated cost $1,002,650, Federal aid $501,325; Maryland, 7 projects, 23.93 miles, estimated cost $908,347.77, Federal aid $413,821.38; California, 3 projects, 40.69 miles long, estimated cost $834,239.02, Federal aid $448,969.51.

While Ohio projects come fourth in the estimated cost of the roads, the Federal aid allowance is below that awarded to four States where the cost of the roads is smaller. This happens because in that State the Federal aid asked for is only about 31 per cent. of the cost of the roads.

Georgia leads in the number of projects approved, sixteen, and also in the mileage of the roads covered, 103.91. Pennsylvania and Virginia each had nine projects approved. The Pennsylvania mileage was 47.81 and the Virginia 41.53, being third and fourth in the list. Pennsylvania's sixty-five miles put her mileage next to that of Georgia.

The big Illinois and Connecticut projects both ask for 50 per cent. of the estimated cost as the Federal aid allowance. The Illinois project is for a concrete road through Grundy, La Salle, Bureau, Putnam, and Marshall Counties. The Connecticut project is for a bituminous road in Hartford and New London Counties.

Idaho comes third in the size of a single project. It is 30.50 miles of earth road in Gooding and Twin Falls Counties, a part of the North and South highway, estimated to cost $649,000 and with Federal aid of $324,500. This large cost is due to the heavy grading necessary. Georgia has one project, 15.50 miles of concrete in Chatham County, which will cost $484,774.80, with Federal aid of $200,000.

In the agreements executed during the month Wisconsin leads in number, 14; Texas in mileage, 131.58, and Illinois in Federal aid allowance and in the cost of the roads, $436,043.33 and $917,890.36. The Wisconsin agreements are for roads estimated to cost $630,493.08, with an allowance of $198,625.50.

The Maryland road having the highest average cost per mile, $56,817, will be 4.68 miles of concrete, which will cost $267,905. A road in Warren County, Penn., will cost $44,000 a mile and one in Howard County, Md., $39,853. These also are to be of concrete.

The month's record shows the South moving forward in the road building campaign, with projects showing higher grade construction. Of the sixteen Georgia projects approved two were for bridges, seven for concrete and one for either a brick, concrete, or bituminous road, the others being for sand-clay roads. The concrete roads will cost from $30,000 to $32,000 a mile, indicating the highest type construction, for the cost in the South is usually less than that in the North. Louisiana will build a short bituminous macadam road at an estimated cost of $86,377 a mile. Virginia has one bituminous macadam and three concrete roads in nine projects approved.

Diamond Merchant and Importer Killed in Auto Upset at Rye—Girl Dies at Rockaway

Passersby along the Milton Road heard the sound of an automobile horn coming from a marsh just on the fringe of Rye, N. Y., yesterday morning, and, investigating, they found a large motor car upside down. Unable to reach two forms pinned beneath the machine, the fire alarm was sounded and firemen who responded derricked the car, recovering the bodies of Henry Kryn, a diamond merchant of 100 East Thirty-ninth Street, and Joseph B. Leake, a Manhattan importer whose home is in Ridge Street, Rye.

Investigating, the police learned that both men had spent the evening at the American Yacht Club and began the journey home in Kryn's machine with the owner at the wheel. It was said that he lost control of the car and it skidded into the marsh, overturning. The horn was pressed against the ground, sounding the alarm. Apparently, Kryn had died from suffocation, the police said.

One girl was killed and another critically injured early in the morning when a driver of a machine, said to have been fleeing after hitting a pedestrian, drove his car over the bulkhead at the foot of Eighty-second Street, Rockaway Beach. The girl killed was Miss Mabel Leinsteadt of 290 Himrod Street, Brooklyn, and her companion was Miss Rose Atwell of 117 Cooper Street, Brooklyn.

According to the police, the automobile was operated by John Winkler, Jr., of 1,430 Myrtle Avenue. Young Winkler and a friend, Joseph Walker, of 3157 Bleecker Street, Brooklyn, went to a dance at the beach and there became acquainted with the two girls. The police said that on the way home the machine struck Samuel Meltzer of 90 Lenox Avenue, Manhattan, slightly injuring him. After the accident, the police said, young Winkler speeded away and in attempting a short cut to regain the boulevard he hit the bulkhead and his grip on the wheel was shaken loose. The Leinsteadt girl was killed instantly.

Winkler was arrested and held on a charge of homicide for examination tomorrow. The police are holding Walker for further investigation.

531 REPATRIATES RETURN ON ORDUNA

Ninety Were Members of Jewish Battalion Which Saw Service in Palestine and Egypt

UNDER THE BRITISH FLAG

When Jerusalem Was Entered People Lined the Streets Cheering Their Deliverers.

Among the 531 Americans, who had fought under the British flag, returning yesterday on the steamer Orduna, were ninety members of the Jewish battalions, many of whom had seen service in Palestine and Egypt. Quite a few of the soldiers wore the kilties of Scottish regiments, while the Colonial insignia of the larger of England's possessions appeared on the uniforms of others.

A Scottish band met the Orduna at the port of debarkation and escorted the soldiers to the Seventy-first Regiment Armory, in this city, where they were paid off, having been previously discharged in England. Twenty brides of the soldiers were placed in charge of the Red Cross, while their husbands were at the armory.

All of the repatriated Americans expressed satisfaction at coming home again, but said they were glad they had been in the war with the British forces. Not all of the Jewish soldiers saw active service in the East, as the signing of the armistice stopped further shipments of troops from England, where they were training.

There are still 5,000 Jewish soldiers from all parts of the world on duty in the Holy Land, and many of them have elected to remain there when discharged from the army, according to Private Jacob Borden of Chicago, formerly of 589 Hopkinson Avenue, Brooklyn, who served under Lieut. Col. J. S. Miller, also a Hebrew, in the 38th Battalion. The desire for a Jewish homeland was strong among the members of the Jewish Battalion, he declared. This feeling also existed among the peoples of Palestine, whose life in the past had not been a pleasant one, he said.

"As in my case," said Private Borden, "the majority of the members of the Jewish Battalion enlisted in this country and went to Windsor, Canada, for their preliminary training. When I went there just a year ago more than a thousand Jewish men were gathered in the camp waiting to be sent across. The steamer which took us to England was simply packed with soldiers and the conditions were bad because of overcrowding."

After training a short time in England, Private Borden said the Jewish battalions were taken to Palestine, where some of them were transferred to duty in Egypt. He showed pictures of the members clad in the Summery costume of the Egyptians, which was adopted by the army. Private Borden was not among those who marched with General Allenby into Jerusalem, but Private Morris Kaplan of Kansas City, Mo., another returning soldier, who took part in the triumphal entry, said it was a most inspiring sight.

"Lining the sidewalks as we marched along were thousands of people with happy, smiling faces," he said. "There could be no doubt of our welcome, as they had suffered long under Turkish tyranny. Even to this day the people of Palestine talk of little else except their deliverance by the Allies."

Members of the battalion who lived in this city were Abraham Silverman of 2,999 Third Avenue, M. Rosen, 1,407 Wilkins Avenue, Brooklyn; Morris Flatman, 602 East 138th Street; Lewis Bubinsky, 648 Georges Avenue, Brooklyn, and Myer Dubois of 4,903 Twelfth Avenue, Brooklyn.

Members of the Red Mogid Dovid and Hebrew Sheltering and Immigrant Aid Society, who met the Jewish soldiers at the pier, took them to the headquarters of the latter organization at 229 East Broadway, where they were given a dinner. The out-of-town soldiers will remain for several days as the guests of the society and will be taken on a tour of the city today.

Major Gen. H. Keppel Bethell, who is said to be the youngest Major General in the British Army, was one of the 305 cabin passengers who arrived on the Orduna. General Bethell, who was accompanied by his staff, said he had been detailed as British Military Attaché to this country.

The transport Ryndam docked late yesterday afternoon with 3,004 passengers on board. The largest military unit on board was the 2d Cavalry.

DETROIT READY FOR "REDS."

Police Arm to Suppress Rising Planned for July 4.

Special to The New York Times.

DETROIT, Mich., June 29.—In preparation for a demonstration of force July 4 by Detroit "Reds" of the Left Wing of the Socialist Party, supported by American adherents of Bolshevism, I. W. W. sympathizers, and other anti-Government forces, the Police Department for weeks has been drilling a special platoon of police for riot duty. It has accumulated 200,000 rounds of ammunition, and in co-operation with Government forces headed by G. Oliver Frick, District Chief of the Immigration Service, will suppress with ruthless hand any attempt to disturb or upset the constituted authorities.

The Government several weeks ago delivered in Detroit 100 army pattern rifles for use if the "Reds" attempt to duplicate the lawlessness of their brethren in Russia, Germany, and Austria.

Pamphlets, printed in Detroit, calling on the "Reds" to organize for the demonstration have been circulated by the thousands. The text of the pamphlets has been withheld.

CONFEREES AGREE ON 325,000 ARMY

Report of the Committee Will Be Submitted to Congress Today.

COST TO BE $888,000,000

Department Will Be Allowed to Negotiate for Purchase of Cantonments.

WASHINGTON, June 29.—With the average size of the army for the coming fiscal year fixed at 325,000 officers and men, House and Senate conferees today reached an agreement on the $888,000,000 Army Appropriation bill. A report will be submitted tomorrow in both Houses.

As agreed on, the bill will permit the War Department to complete negotiations for real estate upon which cantonments or Government buildings have been built, or to complete the construction of buildings already begun if within the Government's interests to do so. Senate amendments were adopted shutting off appropriations now being used in constructing Camp Denning, Ga., and Camp Bragg, N. C., which were to be used as machine gun and artillery schools.

The conferees reduced to $40,000,000 the Senate appropriation of $55,000,000 for the Army Air Service and eliminated the Senate provisions authorizing acquisition by the Government of the Dayton-Wright plant at Dayton, Ohio, and the Elmwood plant of the Curtiss Airplane Company at Buffalo, which were to be used in experimental aeronautic work. The Senate provision for a dirigible station at Burlington, N. J., also was rejected.

A clean-up of conference reports on the five appropriation bills, carrying altogether about $2,350,000,000, is planned tomorrow, to be followed by a recess until the following Monday, soon after which President Wilson is expected to return and submit the Peace Treaty. If the appropriation bills are not passed tomorrow it is proposed to begin the July 4 recess Tuesday.

LOWELL WOULD RAISE HARVARD SALARIES

Wants Income Increased $450,000 a Year to Meet This and Other Needs.

CAMBRIDGE, June 29.—Harvard's pressing needs require an increased expenditure of $450,000 a year, according to a statement by President Lowell made public here today in answer to a joint letter from Thomas W. Lamont and Eliot Wadsworth, alternate Chairmen of the Endowment Fund Committee, announcing plans for a nation-wide campaign in the Fall to raise the $10,000,000 necessary to provide an income of nearly half a million dollars. Mr. Wadsworth has just returned from Red Cross work in Paris to direct the Harvard campaign, and Mr. Lamont is expected back soon from his duties as financial adviser to the Peace Conference.

The needs which President Lowell sets forth are:

An average increase of 25 per cent. in the salaries of professors, "to place them on the basis of a fair remuneration."

A greater outlay for supervision of the physical and moral well-being of the student body.

Strengthening of the department of chemistry to keep abreast with the increasing demands in the fields of industrial and physiological chemistry.

Putting on a permanent basis such departments as those of Public Health, Industrial Hygiene, and Tropical Medicine, which are now dependent in large part on temporary subscriptions for a limited period.

Creating a mobile fund to meet emergencies and opportunities as they arise in one or another of the university's departments.

Speaking of salaries, President Lowell says:

"Professors in universities do not demand, or expect, salaries on the scale of those earned in business or among the successful members of the great active professions. They would be satisfied with salaries that enabled them to live with reasonable comfort in the comparatively modest scale of life which their position calls for, and to give to their children as good an education as they received themselves. They also want to provide for their old age; and now that the Carnegie Foundation is not to supply pensions for teachers hereafter appointed, this must be done by an addition to their salaries from the university."

CHICAGO FIREMEN THREATEN

Salary Increase or Strike on Fourth, Their Ultimatum.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, June 29.—Members of the City Fire Department today voted to "resign en masse" on July 4 unless the City Council grants their demands for $500 a year salary increase, or at least gives them a compromise increase of $363. Their present salary is $1,500 a year.

About 1,500 disgruntled policemen attended the firemen's meeting and are represented on the "Ultimatum" Committee, which will call on Mayor Thompson and the Council Finance Committee tomorrow to present their demands.

"Two thousand dollars a year or strike" is the question 1,200 patrolmen today voted to have decided before midnight tomorrow by a referendum ballot. At midnight the city budget by which patrolmen receive $1,740 a year is effective.

HOUSING UNDER WAY FOR 4,675 FAMILIES

Elkus Analyzes Figures on Construction in City—Builders to be Questioned Today.

SINGLE TAXERS URGE CAUSE

Party Announces Plan to Enter Presidential Contest—May Run Gorgas.

To determine why builders are not erecting apartment houses, hearings will be held today and tomorrow at the City Hall. An effort will be made to determine to what extent the need for housing in Greater New York is being met by constructions. The hearings are being held at the instance of the New York State Reconstruction Commission. Tenement House Commissioner Mann will attend, and Abram I. Elkus, Chairman of the Reconstruction Commission, will assist in examination of the witnesses, who will include representative builders.

Analyzing figures presented by the Tenement House Commission yesterday, Mr. Elkus said that buildings now being erected would provide 1,609 apartments in Brooklyn, 1,634 in the Bronx, 441 in Queens, and 681 in Manhattan. "Far less is being accomplished in Brooklyn to relieve the congestion," he said, "notwithstanding the number of buildings going up, than in the Bronx. Moreover, if it happens that the two-story house is of such standard that it will shelter in luxury a $10,000 a year man, with his wife and no children, we will be found still further from satisfying the needs of the people." This was in reference to the fact that many of the new buildings in Brooklyn are two-story houses.

Analyzes House Building.

In his analysis of the housing situation, Mr. Elkus said that of the buildings being put up for residence purposes in the city, 56 are in the Bronx, 163 in Brooklyn, and 38 in Queens.

"The average number of flats to the building in Brooklyn is ten," he continued. "The average is pulled down because there are so many two and three family houses in the outlying districts. The average number of apartments to the building in Manhattan is thirty-two. Many of these are elevator apartments intended for persons able to pay fairly high prices.

"The cheapest buildings going up are in Brooklyn. Those in Queens are more expensive. Those in the Bronx are costing about three times as much, and those in Manhattan ten times as much as those in Brooklyn. The Brooklyn houses average three stories—only a few are more than four. In Queens they are four and five stories high. In the Bronx and Manhattan half the buildings are from eight to thirteen stories.

"The Brooklyn and Queens apartments average four rooms, the Bronx just under four, and Manhattan five. In Manhattan nearly half the buildings are on a corner; in Brooklyn, one-eighth; in Queens, one-third; in the Bronx, one-fourth. The Queens houses nearly all have yards more than fifteen feet deep in Brooklyn two-thirds have yards of this size; in the Bronx, one-sixth; in Manhattan, one-third.

"In Brooklyn, more than half the stairways have windows opening on the outer air. In Manhattan, a little over one-third have such windows. In the Bronx, one has a window opening on the street, and the others on the courts. In Queens, eight-ninths of them have windows to the outer air."

Opposition was expressed by delegates of the Single Tax Party, who left New York yesterday, after holding a national convention, to all the proposals thus far made for the alleviation of the housing situation, on the ground that it was class legislation. They contended that the only remedy for the lack of building was application of the single tax principle to land. Robert Macauley, National Chairman of the party, explained at the headquarters, 246 West Fourteenth Street, that the single tax was based on the sacredness of private property, but that it would abolish private privilege as maintained in the possession of unimproved land. Asked what the effect would be of the single tax in New York City, he said it would make it unprofitable for any one to hold vacant land, for he would have to pay the same tax upon it as the man who has built upon his property. This, he contended, would make building a profitable venture. As the city would take the rent of the land as taxes, it would mean that the rent of the land, which now amounts to $300,000,000 annually in the city, would be taken for public expenses, and returned to the people in the form of public conveniences and utilities. As the city budget is somewhat over $200,000,000 there would be a considerable margin left over.

To Run Single Taxer for President.

The convention decided to run separate non-fusion tickets in the field this Fall in Maine, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New Hampshire, Vermont, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Missouri, California, Virginia, and West Virginia. They also will have a ticket for President next year.

According to the sentiment expressed among the delegates the strongest Presidential possibility is former Surgeon General William C. Gorgas, with Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt of New York as candidate for Vice President. Others mentioned were William Wallace of Belleville, N. J.; Joseph Dana Miller, editor of The Single Tax Review of this city, and Dr. A. W. Plummer of Lisbon Falls, Me.

An active organization campaign is to be launched throughout the country to build up machinery for the national elections. Jerome C. Reis of Philadelphia will work in the Southern States. Joseph A. Robinson, also of Philadelphia, will have charge of the Middle West territory, and John Goldsmith, another Philadelphian, will work in the Pacific Coast field.

Resolutions passed by the convention were summed up yesterday as follows:

"The new Single Tax Party proposes to open up the land of America for use, abolishing all taxes on production. Ample revenue will be obtained by taking the $9,000,000,000 which represents the annual rental value of the land in the United States, now extorted from users by private persons. Its collection by the Government for the use of the nation will save the landless men and women of America from Bolshevism.

"Our returning soldiers should receive the right to use the land they fought to defend. The suggestion that they be permitted to buy and reclaim the swamps and deserts of the West, while acres lie idle, is an insult. The single tax would open to occupation and use by our soldiers millions of acres near New York and other large cities. There is enough good land in America not only for our 6,000,000 farmers, but for ten times that number. There are only three people to the square mile in the United States, as compared with six times that number in Denmark. There are six to twenty times as many in England, Germany, and Belgium. The single tax would open to occupation and use by our soldiers the 14,000,000 acres in the East which are now not used. The people can never be free while they continue to pay to landlords for permission to live on the land that nature put here for the equal use of all mankind."

Socialist Warns French Radicals.

PARIS, June 29.—Deputy André Renard, Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Unified Radical and Socialist Parties, the strongest of all the political parties of France, in a speech at Toulouse today declared that the Radical-Socialist program at the impending elections must absolutely repudiate war classes and Bolshevist doctrines.

German Naval Captain Flees With a Warship

STOCKHOLM, June 27, (Associated Press.)—The German submarine chaser UZ-21, flying the German war flag and commanded by Captain Ruckteshel, arrived at Gothenburg Thursday. The occupants of the chaser, who were without passports, landed and are under police surveillance.

Captain Ruckteshel did not divulge the destination of the craft upon leaving Kiel. When the UZ-21 reached the open sea he told the crew that he would not return, as the honor and fortune of Germany had been lost in the Peace Treaty. He intended, he said, to proceed to South America, and asked the crew to accompany him, leaving the chaser at Gothenburg.

Eight of the men consented, but the others, having wives and children in Germany, refused.

J. L. MOTT'S SUMMER HOME DESTROYED

Fire Sweeps "Paradise Rocks," Valued at Over a Million, at Middletown, R. I.

NEWPORT FIREMEN CALLED

Summer Residents Help Fight Flames and Save Some of the Costly Furnishings.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, June 29.—Paradise Rocks, in Middletown, the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Jordan L. Mott of New York, which they intended taking possession of tomorrow, leaving their apartments at Pine Lodge here, was destroyed by fire this morning. Only the walls were left.

The house was of three stories, of stone, and, with its contents, was valued at more than $1,000,000. A large amount of property was lost. Mr. Mott could not state the amount of the insurance.

Smoke issuing from the residence first attracted the caretaker, gardener, and other employes, and they tried to enter the house to call the Newport Fire Department by telephone, but the instrument was out of order. Finally a neighbor's telephone was used. The time thus lost in calling the firemen gave the flames strong headway, fanned as they were by a strong northwest gale.

In the meantime volunteer fire fighters from St. George's School and of the Summer homes in the neighborhood formed a brigade, which removed furnishings, books and other property under the direction of Mr. Mott, who was called soon after the fire was discovered.

Dr. Cerrio, who, with Mrs. Cerrio, has a Summer place nearby, rushed into the house and, at the risk of his life, saved many valuable articles. The painting of Mr. Moot's grandfather, the late Jordan L. Mott, seated with other American inventors, and other valuable paintings were saved.

Mr. and Mrs. Mott stated a defective flue in the kitchen filled the house with smoke and not the flames, which the firemen could have checked had they been notified earlier, and would have done had the telephone service been in working order. That it was out of commission was not known to Mr. and Mrs. Mott. Just how the fire started remains undiscovered. There was no fire in the kitchen.

Four firemen of the Newport department were injured, two being taken to the Newport Hospital suffering from a fall from a ladder. The others were overcome by smoke.

Three-quarters of the contents of the house was destroyed, including a valuable tapestry and a large pipe organ. The residence itself and the furniture, hangings and paintings were partly insured.

Other summer residents offered their homes to Mr. and Mrs. Mott, and they accepted the invitation of Mrs. Hermann Oelrichs, and will occupy the Redwood Cottage on Tuesday. Just what their future plans will be they have not decided, but they will remain here for at least two weeks.

Mrs. Mott lost all of her wardrobe, save for three costumes, which were at Pine Lodge.

While the Motts were at Paradise Rocks Saturday afternoon, the Stars and Stripes were hoisted in honor of the declaration of peace. They had arranged to have the house blessed Monday, with the Rev. Charles W. Forster, rector of Emmanuel Church, officiating.

Paradise Rocks was formerly the J. Mitchell Clark estate. His widow, who married the Rev. Frederick Goodman, formerly rector of St. Mary's Church at Portsmouth, R. I., before her recent death, sold the estate to Mr. Mott.

YATES FIGHTS RETURN.

Robber and Jail Breaker Loath to Go Back to Sing Sing.

Special to The New York Times.

OSSINING, June 29.—Robert Martin and Michael Mack, keepers of Sing Sing Prison, who went to Missouri to bring back Chester Yates, robber and jailbreaker, it was announced at the prison today, had encountered difficulties.

Yates is making a legal fight and the Governor of Missouri, Warden Edward V. Brophy was informed by telegraph, had refused to surrender him. The Governor, according to a dispatch from Keeper Martin, who is at Jefferson City, Mo., has informed the waiting keepers that Yates must have a hearing. No date had been set for the hearing when Martin's telegram was sent, so Yates gains more time. Warden Brophy believes that Missouri eventually will surrender the fugitive.

The keepers went West supplied with documents bearing Yates's court record, which Prison Secretary Daniel J. Hickey obtained in New York City, where Yates was convicted of robbing aged Aaron Bancroft, a broker, of $87,000 in securities. It was for this offense that he was sentenced to twenty-one years in Sing Sing, of which he had served but four months when he escaped on Dec. 18, 1912. The keepers also carried extradition papers from Governor Smith to the Missouri executive.

The belief about Sing Sing is that Yates's aim is to remain long enough in the Kansas City Jail to give him an opportunity to escape, as he did from New Orleans Jail when he was being held there four years ago for the Sing Sing authorities.

THREE ARE SWEPT OVER DAM

Man and Boy Are Drowned in the Susquehanna.

HARRISBURG, June 29.—M. Abramson, aged 29, of Harrisburg, and Harry Boyer, aged 11, son of Harry Boyer of Lebandon, were drowned in the Susquehanna River today when a canoe capsized after they were swept over the dam at the lower end of the city.

Charles Rife, aged 8, son of Mrs. David K. Young of this city, who was also in the boat, kept himself afloat until rescued by John Keiser. None of the three could swim.

Abramson, a rabbi cantor in a local congregation, was well known in Hebrew circles in Philadelphia and New York.

POLICE CHIEFS AID HUNT FOR BOMB MEN

Leaders of International Association Pledge Co-operation with Government's Agencies.

HOLD A CONFERENCE HERE

Chief Flynn Reports Progress and Predicts Ultimate Arrest of the Conspirators.

NEWTON TELLS OF INQUIRY

State Attorney General Declares That the Soviet Theory Originated in This Country.

A conference was held at Police Headquarters yesterday afternoon at which plans for the co-operation of the Bureau of Investigaation of the Department of Justice and the police organizations of all the chief cities in the country were discussed and approved. William J. Flynn, the new chief of the Bureau of Investigaation, was present as the representative of the Government and put before the police officials the Government's program for handling persons and organizations that advocate the overthrow of the Government. At the close of the conference Chief Flynn received the assurance of every police official present that the departments which they represented would aid the Government in every way possible.

Chief Flynn expressed himself last night as highly pleased over the conference. He said that the Government was making slow but sure progress in its efforts to identify and arrest the conspirators who set off bombs in the homes of Attorney General Palmer and other prominent officials a month ago. There would be no letup in the investigation, he said, until those who were concerned in the bomb plots were brought to justice. It might be weeks or months, he said, before the investigation was ended.

Will Co-operate with Flynn.

After the conference the following statement was issued in the name of the International Association of Chiefs of Police:

A meeting, called by Chief Joseph M. Quigley of the Rochester Police Department, who is President of the International Association of Chiefs of Police, was held this afternoon at the office of Chief Inspector John Daly at police headquarters. Chief William J. Flynn of the Bureau of Investigation, Department of Justice, was present. It was sought to obtain greater co-operation between Federal investigating agencies and the Police Departments of the cities of the United States.

Chief Flynn was assured of the co-operation of all Police Departments. Mr. Flynn told of the proposed Federal laws suggested by Attorney General Mitchell Palmer, which are now being considered by Congress. These will, it is expected, solve many of the problems.

The principal result of the meeting was a suggestion that a larger conference of Mayors, prosecuting attorneys, Judges, and police administrative heads be held at an early date to consider movements organized in this country to undermine Government and destroy all authority. Mayor Harry Davis of Cleveland, Ohio, received authority to confer with the Government and to call such a meeting whenever he should see fit.

Those who attended were Mayor Davis, Chief Flynn, Major R. W. Pullman, Superintendent of Police, Washington, D. C.; Colonel John J. Garrity, Superintendent of Police, Chicago; James Robinson, Superintendent of Police, Philadelphia; Frank Smith, Chief of Police, Cleveland; W. P. Rutledge, Superintendent of Police, Detroit; F. N. Mitchell, Chief of Police, Newton, Mass.; John M. Tracey, Chief of Police, Paterson, N. J.; John Daly, Chief Inspector, New York City; John J. Cray, commanding Detective Division, New York Police Department; Joseph M. Quigley, Chief of Police, Rochester; Joseph A. Lestrange, Lieutenant of Detectives, Philadelphia; A. J. Emanuel, Lieutenant of Police, Philadelphia; Guye Burlingam, Assistant Inspector of Police, Washington, and James F. Gegan, Sergeant in Charge of the Bomb Squad, New York Police Department.

The International Association of Chiefs of Police includes the heads of the forces of the chief Canadian cities and the Canadian authorities will extend assistance to the American Federal and municipal organizations. For some time the Canadian and American Governments have been co-operating in investigating the activites of alien agitators. Severay persons have been deported from Canada to Europe as a result of information transmitted to Ottawa from Washington.

Discusses Origin of Bolshevism.

Attorney General Charles D. Newton of this State, who is acting as chief counsel of the legislative committee that is investigating the Red situation in this State, asserted yesterday that Bolshevism, as it was practiced in Russia at the present time, was of American and not of Russian origin. New York and Chicago "malcontents," as the Attorney General described them, were now prominent in the Bolshevist movement in Russia.

"Bolshevism in Russia," said Attorney General Newton, "originated in the United States. This is one of the disclosures made by the Legislative Committee created to investigate Bolshevism in New York. No less an authority than Nikolai Lenin, who with Leon Trotsky, directs the affairs of dismantled Russia, has stated this fact.

"Lenin made this statement while discussing plans for the implantation of the Bolshevik seed in America. Lenin's plans called for the spread of Bolshevism throughout Europe and its introduction in America. Trotsky, his partner, was formerly a New York City agitator and left America just before the collapse of Russia. The dual dictators have surrounded themselves in Russia with scores of former New York and Chicago radicals. These facts were disclosed in the preliminary investigations of the committee.

"Testimony taken by the committee indicated that the ultimate aim of all the radical organizations operating in the United States, the anarchists, the Industrial Workers of the World, the Workers, International Industrial Union, and certain Socialist organizations, is to substitute what they call an 'industrial democracy' for the present form of Government. To achieve this 'industrial democracy' they purpose so to harass industry by strikes and interference with the machinery of production as to create industrial chaos."

G. W. Wickersham, chairman of New York State branch of the American Legion, in a statement issued yesterday appealed to members of the Legion to aid in efforts to curb anarchistic activities in this State.

"The Bolsheviki," said Mr. Wickersham, "are trying to stir up trouble in America. Believing in murder and riot they have started a campaign in an attempt to persuade returning American soldiers to join them. The American Legion stands for the Constitution of the United States and for the maintenance of law and order and is unalterably opposed to all Bolsheviki, 'reds,' or any other persons or groups having as their object the overthrow of the American Government."

DRAMA

Owen Davis Solves a Mystery.

The essential ingredients of the successful mystery play are an assortment of persons possessed of full and adequate motives for committing the dread deed, but no one of whom committed it. Add thereto a fair technical skill in the unraveling, a plausible denouement, and the result is a play which must inevitably find a considerable audience.

Owen Davis's "At 9:45," brought precipitately to the Playhouse on Saturday night to reap such benefit as attaches to priority among mystery plays, falls broadly into this class. It is a better play in kind than "The Blue Pearl," and not so good a one as "The Thirteenth Chair," with which it will doubtless find general comparison. Technically it is hardly less adroit than the Veiller play, but it has not the valuable atmosphere of the supernatural, or a substitute therefor, to impart an additional air of mystery. It is thus compelled to base its appeal more largely upon its juggling of the ray of suspicion.

The play gets briskly under way with the discovery of a badly wounded youth amid melodramatic circumstances. The first act is distinguished for its cumulative interest, clarity of exposition and economy of means thereto; thereafter the successive steps do not always carry the element of surprise essential to a work of the kind. The dénouement does not quite thrill, and should, and the device of having the guilty one baldly revealed by the wounded man ran hardly be called ingenious. In several of its dramatic passages the play is written with more sincerity than Mr. Davis has put into any of his previous writings for the stage; the comedy moments are overwritten, and broadly theatrical.

There were a number of good performances, although the haste with which the piece was produced was not without its effects. Marie Goff put real feeling into the rôle of the suspected heroine, and Edith Shayne, as the mother of the wounded youth, had several effective outbursts. John Cromwell was a business-like police captain, and George Backus, Frank Hatch, and Edward Langford were equally competent. Elise Bartlett, in a lesser rôle, was vivacious and pretty.

ACTORS AID TANK CORPS.

$1,400 Benefit Calls Attention to Men's Clubhouse Here.

Men of the Tank Corps and their friends last night filled the Hudson Theatre at a theatrical performance given under the auspices of the Tank Corps Club, an organization of some 300 or more ex-tankers. The Tank Corps Club has opened a clubhouse at 17 East Forty-first Street, and the performance last night, in addition to providing revenue, was designed to call the attention of other Tank Corps men to the enterprise.

More than $1,400 was raised at last night's performance. Those on the program included Gordon and William Dooley, Chic Sale, Elizabeth Brice and William Morrissey, Sophie Tucker, Delyle Alda, Evan Burrows-Fontaine, Walter Scanlon, Walter English, Lou Holtz, Georgia O'Ramey, Marie Nordstrom, Wilda Bennett, and numerous others.

The clubrooms in Forty-first Street are open to all tank men, whether or not they are members of the club. It is hoped in time to attract all the New York tank men to the organization.

GOVERNOR'S HIT WINS GAME.

After Clinching Baseball Victory, Chief Executive Takes Foot Race.

Governor Smith got back into his old game yesterday by leading an Aldermanic nine in a baseball game with the City Hall reporters at the latter's annual outing. With the score a tie in the ninth inning and an Alderman on each base, the State Executive rapped out a two-base hit that brought in the winning runs. The game, which was played at Prohibition Park, Bayside, Queens, ended with the Aldermen victorious by a score of 12 to 10. The defeated reporters declared that the umpires had given the Governor the best of it in close decisions. Umpires were removed after almost every inning, and finally Sheriff David H. Knott and Marshal Thomas McCarthy were drafted to finish the work, with "Secret Service Billy" Flynn umpiring the umpires.

The Governor later showed his athletic versatility, by defeating Representative Tom Smith of Tammany Hall in a 100-yard dash, which the timekeeper said was run in 15 seconds flat. Captain James Brady of the East 104th Street Station defeated Michael Blake, Republican leader, in the fat men's race. Magistrate Thomas Nolan won a race with Magistrate Joseph E. Corrigan, and Thomas Farley was the victor over McCourt in the Aldermanic race. A clambake concluded the festivities.

TO DISCUSS FREE PORTS.

Representatives of Commercial Organizations to Hold Conference Here

Representatives of the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce, the Merchants' Association of the Atlantic Coast, the Philadelphia Board of Trade, the New Orleans Association of Commerce, the Philadelphia Bourse, the Merchants' and Manufacturers' Association of Baltimore, the Savannah Board of Trade and of the Chambers of Commerce of Chicago, Boston, St. Louis, Detroit, Cincinnati, Oakland, San Diego, Seattle, Tacoma, Newport News, Mobile, Memphis and of Bellingham, Wash., will meet in the Merchants' Association rooms today to confer about the proposed establishment of free ports in the United States.

William Kent of the United States Tariff Commission will explain the reasons which led the commission to report in favor of establishing free ports, and will describe the provisions of the Sanders-Sheppard bill now pending in Congress.

The Merchants' Association will give a dinner to the delegates at the Waldorf-Astoria this evening.

WINS PEACE MEDAL PRIZE.

Chester Beach's Design Is Accepted by Numismatic Society.

The American Numismatic Society announced yesterday that Chester Beach, a young American sculptor, was the winner in the organization's competition for a peace medal design. The competition was opened shortly after the signing of the armistice and fifteen sculptors were entered.

Mr. Beach's successful design is a conception of what the peace of 1919 symbolizes. On the obverse, Peace is shown with the palm branch and wreath of victory. On the other side of a winged horse, Justice is typified. Both Peace and Justice are represented as advancing together. On the reverse is shown the palace of Versailles, the façade lighted up by the sun just bursting through clouds. The whole is framed by a decorative wreath, and the inscription, "Peace of Versailles, 1919," and "The American Numismatic Society" complete the design.

HELD FOR GRAND LARCENY.

Cassano Charged with Robbing Safe at Y. M. H. A. Rooms.

Joseph Cassano, 21 years old, of 530 East 118th Street was held under $3,000 bail by Magistrate Raphael Tobias, in the Harlem Court, yesterday on a short affidavit charging suspicion of grand larceny. The affidavit was made by Detectives James Donovan and William Veale of the East Eighty-eighth Street Station, who arrested Cassano on Saturday night at his home.

The detectives allege that the defendant, on April 28, while employed as a night clerk in the Young Men's Hebrew Association, Ninety-second Street and Lexington Avenue, disappeared with $250 and two watches, valued at $35, which were in the safe. The detectives said that the money and watches were the property of soldiers and sailors staying at the association's rooms.

Seeks News of Dorothy Russell.

An advertisement in newspapers yesterday signed "M. K." and asking for information as to the whereabouts of Miss Dorothy Russell, daughter of Mrs. Alexander P. Moore, (Lillian Russell,) caused much speculation among Miss Russell's friends. Information from Pittsburgh last night stated that Miss Russell had been living with her mother in that city and was at her home there until last night, when she took a train to Atlantic City to join her parents.

"Galeties of 1919" Postponed.

The Shuberts have postponed to next Monday the opening of "The Galeties of 1919," which had been sold out for tomorrow night at the Forty-fourth Street Theatre. The company arrived from Atlantic City yesterday to find the remodeling of the theatre still under way, and complicated further by a decorators' strike. It was decided that it would be a physical impossibility to start the Summer show before July 7.

T. P. Shonts Slightly Improved.

The condition of Theodore P. Shonts, President of the Interborough Rapid Transit Company, who is ill at his home, 930 Park Avenue, showed slight improvement last night, according to his attending physician, Dr. J. Bentley Squier of 49 East Forty-ninth Street though he continues seriously ill. The fact that he has not grown worse has given some encouragement for his ultimate recovery. He has been ill for a month, and a week ago was operated on for a complication which developed from pneumonia.

Dies After Transfusion Fails.

Constable William MacPherson died yesterday at his home at Ossining, N. Y., of pernicious anemia. Judge George Cowie, for whom MacPherson had acted as process server, gave nearly a quart of his blood by transfusion within a month in an effort to save the life of the constable.

THE SCREEN

The Crown Prince has succeeded Charlie Chaplin at the Strand. But he is not nearly so good as Chaplin. He appears in a "comedy," or at least a somewhat hazily seen figure that suggests him goes ungracefully through a number of scenes cleverly joined by added pictures and considerable text. The story told about the film, in fact made part of it, is that a cameraman concealed himself and his machine in an old cart and rode about Wieringen in the path of his Former Royal Highness. Another report is that Mr. Hohenzollern received a much-needed sum of money for his apparently unconscious appearance. Whatever "Hiding in Holland" is, and however it was made, the spectators at the Strand yesterday afternoon got a good laugh out of it.

"Mr. Outing Climbs Aboard," an Outing-Chester scenic, shows impressive views of Victoria Falls, Africa, and some interesting pictures of camels, their uses and habits.

The photoplay at the Strand is J. Parker Read, Jr.'s, presentation of "Sahara," written by C. Gardner Sullivan, and directed by Allen Dwan, with Louise Glaum in the leading rôle. It is another Wild East melodrama. Desert sand and wind storms, picturesque Arabs, dashing horses, camels, beggars, tu bans, flowing robes, bloomers and streets with the atmosphere of the Arabian Nights—these are the materials substituted for the long-familiar two-gun man and his well-known properties. And there's no denying that these materials make good pictures, especially in the hands of Mr. Dwan. There are some effective scenes in "Sahara."

The story is purely mechanical, but Matt Moore does creditable work as the hero, and little Pat Moore is as appealing as a child can be. Edwin Stevens as the villain looks and acts the part.

"Old Faithful," at the Rivoli, is a scenic of Yellowstone Park made by Prizma. Its colors serve to bring out the beauty of the scenery.

George Fitzmaurice is the real hero of "The Avalanche," an adaptation of Gertrude Atherton's novel. This is not to overlook the excellent performance of Lumsden Hare as the leading man, but to emphasize the accomplishment of Mr. Fitzmaurice as the director of the production. There are more eloquent scenes in "The Avalanche" than in the usual motion-picture. Bits of pantomime, stage settings and glimpses of meaningful scenes are often illuminating, without a word of text. They are of the essence of a well-made photoplay.

Elsie Ferguson plays two rôles in the story, a mother and her daughter, and appears in a variety of costumes. No matter what she wears it seems to become her. Also, her acting is more definite in meaning than it has been in most of the other productions in which she has appeared. Zeffie Tilbury, Fred Esmelton, William Roselle, Grace Field and Warner Oland are in the cast.

The story, doubtless known to many, is about the instinct to gamble in a woman inherited by her daughter and eradicated only after harrowing experiences.

The photoplay at the Rialto this week is "Girls," with Marguerite Clark. The beautiful Bruce scenic, "Sundown," which was at the theatre last week, is repeated, with incidental music by Hugo Riesenfeld.

"Open Your Eyes," a motion picture dealing with social conditions in which sex diseases, fake doctors, and ignorance play their ugly part, is at the Central Theatre. It was shown to invited spectators last Friday evening.

The film was made under the supervision of the United States Public Health Service which, it is understood, has sanctioned the arrangement by which it is exhibited for the public. It has also been passed by the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures, and numerous public officials and social workers have endorsed it. All of which would seem to guarantee its accuracy and sincerity.

"Open Your Eyes" is not a pleasant picture. As might be expected, it is a preachment, with many pictures and much text devoted to emphasizing its arguments for publicity and its lessons for the prevention and cure of disease. But it also tells a story that compares favorably with that of the average screen production. It is melodramatic, sometimes too melodramatic, and many spectators will undoubtedly forget from time to time that the film is an instrument of propaganda.

The acting is especially good. Faire Binney is the attractive leading woman, and others who do prominent parts well are Halbert Brown, Eddie Beryll, Emily Marceau, Ben Lyons, and Gaston Glass. Gilbert P. Hamilton was the competent director of the production.

Meet to Aid Motion Pictures.

The Motion Picture and Theatrical Co-operative Association, of which J. A. Quinn is the President and Mrs. John Francis Yawger the Secretary, will hold a second meeting at the Hotel Astor tomorrow afternoon. Representatives of the picture producers, exhibitors and the public will speak, and the results of a questionnaire will be made known. The announced purpose of the association is to obtain better films and overcome evils in the motion-picture industry.

THEATRICAL NOTES.

"The Mood of the Moon," by Cleves Kinkead, author of "Common Clay," will be produced soon by the Shuberts.

Ed Wynn, in addition to heading the cast of "Galeties of 1919," will continue his appearance in the Century Midnight Whirl.

"Cinderella's Sin," by Edwin Milton Royle, will be produced in Stamford on Wednesday, under the direction of the author.

"Three's a Crowd" is the title of the comedy by Earl Derr Biggers and Christopher Morley, which John Cort will produce with Helen Ware.

An extra matinee of the Ziegfeld "Follies" will be held at the New Amsterdam on July 4.

"Bink's Baby," a farce which Arthur Klein will produce in August, is the joint work of Sydney Stone and Eleanor Maud Crane.

Mme. Yoreska, the French actress, sailed for Paris on Saturday. She will be seen again on the local stage in the Fall.

The Brighton Beach Music Hall will reopen as a film theatre on Wednesday. "The Unpardonable Sin" will be the first picture.

BATHING GIRLS JOIN FILM.

Women Faint in Broadway Crowd at Realistic Premiere.

The announcement that nine of the "bathing girls" frequently seen in the motion pictures made by Mack Sennett would appear in person at the Broadway Theatre last night drew a crowd that filled the sidewalk and half the street for an hour before the performance began. Police reserves from the West Thirtieth Street Station were called to keep the people from trying to get into the theatre all at once. It was reported that two women fainted in the crush. They were of the few women present, at least 98 per cent. of those who fought to see the girls in the bathing suits being men.

The performance began with Sennett's "Yankee Doodle in Berlin," a motion-picture burlesque on the war, done along broad lines and with slapstick comedians. Bothwell Browne, a female impersonator, appeared in what is known in comic opera and cabaret as "an Oriental dance." Next came a motion picture entitled "Why Beaches Are Popular," in which the bathing girls were seen, and finally the girls themselves appeared, clad according to expectations. They posed and danced a little and won approval of their lines and looks.

YIDDISH PLAYS FOR WOODS.

500 Acquired for Term of Years by Broadway Producer.

The rights to more than 500 Yiddish plays have been secured by A. H. Woods, who has taken over the work of a group of Yiddish writers for a term of twenty years. The plays include all those produced on the Yiddish stage in New York for the past ten years, as well as all those to be offered during the ten years to come.

Among the authors represented are Jacob M. Gordon, Max Gabel, Leon Kobrin, Moses Richter, Nahum Rackow, S. Kornbluth, Samuel Steinberg, Anshel Schorr, E. Libin, Joseph Latsiner, Isidor Lillian and William Ziegel.

One of these plays, "The Unknown Woman," by E. Libin and Marjorie Blaine, will be Marjorie Rambeau's starring vehicle next season, and "The Man and His Shadow," by the same authors, also will be produced. Three plays by Max Gabel are in preparation. Plays not otherwise adapted to the Broadway stage will be used as motion pictures.

MACDOUGALL PLAYERS SEEN

Move Uptown for a Night in Dramas of Anatole France and Synge.

Duncan Macdougall, who has recently been trying to keep the drama alive in a Fourteenth Street barn, despite the counterefforts of the Police and Fire Departments, based on requirements of the theatre laws, exhibited at the Cohan & Harris Theatre last night the program which he and his company had been playing at intervals in Fourteenth Street.

The bill consisted of three interesting plays, acted by varying degrees of talent. Chief among the plays was Anatole France's satire on French justice, "Crainquebille"; "The Tinker's Wedding," by Synge, and "The Gollywog's Control," by Mr. Macdougall, were also on the program. Mr. Macdougall, particularly in the title rôle of the Anatole France piece, was revealed as an actor of considerable attainments.

THE FINANCIAL SITUATION

Ending of the War Gives America Her Real World Opportunity

The official culmination of the world war marks the termination of a period during which finance, no less than the military, has done many wonderful things of which it may well be proud. The accomplishment of the impossible, or of what the most astute observers said was the impossible, has become almost the daily habit of the last five years. When the war was begun it was popular to say it could not last for many months—no one thought of it in terms of years except one great British General—because finance could not stand it. Yet it did go on, at far greater cost than in the beginning was contemplated even by the pessimists and the timid, who were predicting universal bankruptcy and ruin on the relatively low early estimates, and in the end, when the final break came, it was not finance, ours or the enemy's, that broke.

In every way financial developments were without precedent. The millions of men and the tremendous quantities of goods which were diverted from useful productive pursuits did not cause the break. The expansion of credit and the flotation of loans, on a scale far greater than ever believed possible, were not the deciding factors. Under a system of almost absolute governmental control millions in securities and gold were mobilized and exchanged by the Governments; men were taken from their old occupations and put into new ones; ships and factories were commandeered, or, what amounted to the same thing, were directed along lines not dictated by the ordinary rules of finance and commerce, but chosen for them by political and military power. And still finance weathered the storm, and now, while it is admittedly strained, and in some countries close to exhaustion, it is not broken.

And now the war is ended and the great effort entailed by the struggle is over. But a task as great, perhaps greater, lies ahead. For the United States, whose big debit balance of five years ago, built up over more than a century, has been converted into an even bigger credit balance, the period ahead holds out brighter promise than has been realized out of the era through which we have just passed. We entered the period with a financial structure loosely joined together, or, rather, one not joined together at all. We emerge with what is believed to be probably the most scientific ever created. But whether it is or not is still to be determined. The real test will come now that we are out of war and back to peace, and when we begin to play the part in world rehabilitation that has been cast for us.

There is a great deal to be done. Europe needs many of the things we produce, and needs them in enormous quantity. Also, she needs the credits with which to finance the purchases, and unless these are forthcoming she will not be able to buy, and our vast overseas trade, of which we now are so proud, and our great opportunity to be a real world leader, will have been lost. The best minds of the nation, financial minds, industrial and political minds, are working on the problem, and in time will evolve the answer. But alone the bankers and the merchants and the statesmen cannot do all the work. There must be cooperation of all interests and co-ordination of all resources. Upon the manner in which the public responds to the appeal will depend, in large measure, the success or failure of the venture, and only by a very generous response can it truly be successful.

South America, too, and the Orient want American goods and American credits. They must have them, else they will go to others for the accommodations, and another of our opportunities will be let slip. The United States today is the world's reservoir of both goods and credits, and now that the war is over and we are headed back to something approximating normal economic conditions, it will be necessary to adopt a policy of liberality of action and thought. It is a time for rejoicing that the struggle is finally ended. It is also a time for sober thought and heroic action if this favored nation is to accept its responsibilities.

With the ending of June there usually comes a period of letdown. We have about marketed our old crops and our growing crops are just beginning to hold up their heads. Business, having gone through the rush and bustle of the Winter season, is taking stock. Vacation time is approaching and the very weather conspires to make men ease their efforts. For the stock market this is one of the seasonal periods for slowing down, and this year there is reason to believe that there will be no deviation from the rule. The market has been boiling for several months and is beginning to show signs of cooling off. Big operators are preparing to go away, and whether one cares to admit that any such fact is an influence in an economically controlled stock market or not, it is established that it is, for the stock market needs personal guidance, in other words personal leadership, just as much as do a lot of other things. Thus, it is natural to expect the market to be less active than it has been. This does not necessarily mean that it will go down, although a season of dullness following one of unusual activity frequently develops easing tendencies. There are many reasons why prices should stay up. Economists generally agree that everything else which is measured in money will stay up for an indefinite time, thanks mainly to what they are pleased to call inflation, and if this is so, why should stocks, which are also measured in terms of money, go contrary to the rule? Later in the year the general belief is that activity will return, and if the United States by that time is well launched on its work of reviving the world trade the activity may easily exceed any seen in the past. But for the time being comparative dullness would seem to be the most likely development.

Money rates, after again advancing to the recently established high records, fell off at the end of the week and closed at quite moderate quotations. After Tuesday, which marks the turn into the second half of the year, there should be fewer flurries for a while, but there is no logical reason to expect that the stock market is going to see any early return to the 2 and 3 per cent. call loan rates which have obtained in the past. The Government is anxious to have at least a substantial part of the big loan account at the Reserve Banks liquidated, and until this is done it is likely that official sanction to extremely low demand loan rates will be lacking. Quite aside from this, however, it may be doubted whether money will go so low again as has been the case in the past while other commodities stay up. Money is amenable to the laws of supply and demand just as other commodities are, and if there is to be a great trade renascence there will be plenty of demand for available funds. Incidentally, the cost of capital is not apt to come down with all the foreign countries asking for it, and until the world has caught up with the arrested progress of the last five years and has restored the capital destroyed this demand is certain to continue.

Potentialities of the Oil Industry

The war has emphasized the vast extent to which petroleum products today have come to enter into the activities of industrial life of the people of the world. Petroleum now holds a conspicuous place as a source of natural wealth. The possibilities of the industry are foreshadowed in its recent history. Within a normal lifetime, for instance, the great fuel oil business in this country has been developed and oil deposits have been discovered in many parts of the world yielding a product valued at many millions.

ROOFING ADVANCES AS RAGMAN LAGS

Scrap Metal Was More Profitable Until Felt Manufacturers Paid Higher Price.

CONSUMERS' COST UP 7½%

Brick Barge Captains Go Back on Deck Pending Acceptance of Compromise.

Federal wartime requests to Americans to make their old clothes last until peace time are responsible, in some degree at least, for the increase in the price of prepared roofing material last week.

Scarcity of rags and lack of labor, together with a higher price paid to professional ragpickers to forage for metal scraps to meet the tremendous demand from foundries all over the country, combined, up to last week, to keep down the supply of roofing felt to roofers.

The only way to cure the situation, in the judgment of the prepared roofing interests of the country, was to pay more for rags so as to meet the competition of the scrap metal men and attract from that field the ragpickers lured away by higher returns for their labor.

The result is that last week the prepared roofing interests announced a 7½ to 8 per cent. advance in the price of this kind of roofing material. The ragpickers say that during the war the quantities of rags, especially old woolen clothes, diminished so markedly as to make it wholly impossible to meet their customers' needs.

Since the signing of the armistice there has been a great change, however. More woolen rags are being dumped on the market than usual, but the ragpickers have been more inclined to forage for metal because the old level of rag prices was not nearly as attractive as the metal trade offered. Much of the rag shortage is attributed by the ragman to the tons upon tons of old clothes sent to Belgium and other distressed countries during and since the war.

The upward price movement in building materials is keeping pace with the increase in volume of building construction. All brass pipe will be advanced 2 cents today, making a 4-cent advance in the last three weeks. Some manufacturers in the Connecticut Valley are unable to make further quotations on specifications until the strike situation clears.

If the new wage scale demanded by the men of 60 cents an hour minimum becomes effective the spread between raw material and finished products will be somewhat lengthened. With the copper situation daily strengthening and a big export movement getting under way, many in the trade are inclined to expect that copper and brass products will undergo still further advances.

New York dealers have advanced the price of wood lath from $6.50 to $7 a thousand delivered, a fact which reflects the tenseness of the Canadian spruce supply and scarcity of carriers, according to The Dow Service Daily Building Reports.

The most encouraging factor in favor of prompt building that the market has had since the lending companies announced their intention to further the effort to relieve house and general commercial space shortage, was the statement on Saturday by William K. Hammond, Chairman of the committee in charge of the adjustment of the brick barge Captains' strike, that the Captains had consented to go back to their decks, discharge their cargoes, and return the boats to their owners at the up-river plants pending the acceptance by the union officials of the brick manufacturers' compromise of their demands.

The compromise embraces an increase in their former wages, although not as much as demanded. The unloaders have gone back to work on an 80 cents per thousand basis. Mr. Hammond authorized the statement that this advance in wage to the brick barge men would not necessarily immediately entail a further advance in the price of common brick to the consumer.

He said it is the unqualified belief of both dealers and manufacturers, both of which were represented at the Newburgh conference last Thursday, that the New York common brick market and the building situation as a whole could not stand a further advance in brick prices, and that the compromise, if any were made, must come out of the manufacturers' profit, already exceedingly meager.

This was shown by the fact that second-hand common brick in the New York market today was $14 a 1,000 delivered, only $1 a 1,000 below the market price for the best grades of new Hudson brick at wholesale, on which price must still be added cost of cartage, handling, and 10 per cent. for distribution. In other words, the brick manufacturer, with all his costs and towage fees, gets a yard price of $13.40, as against $14 a 1,000 for second-hand brick dealers, with only a cleaning and delivery charge.

The strike situation has so cleared as to permit contractors to obtain all the brick they require and incidentally the emergency unloading system installed as a strike measure by dealers and manufacturers operating in conjunction with contractors resulted in the breaking of all unloading records last week, when 200,000 brick a day were removed from scows.

Price movements in the supplemental building material market show tubing manufacturers quoting only for immediate acceptance, sash weights up $2 a ton, making car lots $37 and less than car lots $39, as quoted by one firm. Bare and insulated wire has been advanced 1¼ cents a pound, making bare copper wire 20⅝ cents on 5,000 pounds and 21 cents on less; weatherproof 22 cents and enunciator 29 cents. Practically all steel bar business is being placed on a $2.35 basis, and a continuance of the scale through the next quarter is anticipated.

The merger of the various New England wire cloth companies under the name of the Clinton Wright Wire Company, indicates greater stabilization of this wire product on prices. The advance of 25 cents in plain wire becomes effective tomorrow, when both wire and nails will be affected. A 20 to 30 day grace period is allowed contracts, however. The demand from oil centers is taking large quantities of lap weld wrought pipe, but the local market seems well supplied at present.

Building is about 30 per cent. under way in this city and about 50 per cent. throughout the country. It is believed to have about reached its maximum for the present building season. The volume scheduled to proceed next Spring is assuming greater proportions, but the question of building material supply appears to be increasingly urgent as more and more manufacturers are refusing to take heavy forward orders.

PLEA FOR 'MUTTON MONDAY'

Government Moves to Further Encourage Sheep Husbandry.

The average housewife would be surprised to learn that in a year she buys for every person in the household only about 6 pounds of mutton or lamb, as compared with about 71 pounds of pork and 67 pounds of beef. If all American families used sheep meat one day a week in the average daily amount of other meats, that would mean more than 20 pounds of mutton and lamb annually per capita, or four times its present consumption.

More than that, the head of the family, who pays the bills, would no doubt encourage purchasing mutton and lamb in larger cuts, instead of merely a few chops at a time, if he were made to realize the greater economy and the greater encouragement to production. In that connection a shoulder of mutton or a leg of lamb, being smaller than the average beef joint, should appeal especially to small families.

The larger use of mutton is urged by the Government as a part of its campaign, begun as a war measure, to increase the domestic production of sheep on American farms, to the end that the meat and wool supplies might be rapidly increased and the nation relieved in larger measure from its dependence upon other countries for these all-important commodities. This campaign has met with large success, and there has been a great increase in the American sheep population, which it is hoped to maintain and increase.

FOOD FOR FAMISHED WORLD

America's Stock of Wheat Three Times That of 1918, and 1919 Crop to Come.

The Federal Bureau of Markets has just completed the tabulations of the figures obtained in a nation-wide cereal stock survey, made as of June 1. It shows that, with none of the 1919 crop considered, the stock of wheat in the United States is nearly three times as large as it was on the same date last year. The returns leave no doubt of America's ability to do her full share towards feeding a famished world during the coming year and have caused alarm in some quarters lest we were piling up more wheat than might be deemed economically advisable.

The survey shows 51,392,896 bushels of wheat held by 8,684 firms, comprising elevators, warehouses, grain and flour mills, and wholesale dealers, and representing nearly three times the stock held by the same firms on June 1, 1918, the actual percentage being 274.5 per cent. of the 1918 stocks. The figures refer to stocks actually reported and do not represent the total commercial stocks of the country, nor do they include stocks on farms.

The commercial visible supply figures, as published by the Chicago Board of Trade for May 31, 1919, show 23,702,000 bushels of wheat, as against 1,146,000 a year earlier. The corresponding Bradstreet figures show 27,626,000 bushels, as against 4,579,000 for 1918. As compared with the same date last year these figures, as well as those obtained by the more extensive survey, show a very great relative increase in commercial stocks of wheat.

The commercial stocks of other cereals reported for June 1, 1919, were as follows: Corn, 17,254,576 bushels; oats, 45,770,543 bushels; barley, 20,043,375 bushels; rye 14,624,331 bushels. These stocks represent the following percentages of the corresponding stocks on June 1, 1918: Corn, 47.6 per cent.; oats, 90.6, per cent.; barley, 207.2 per cent.; rye, 346.1 per cent.

The commercial stocks of flour and corn meal, as reported for the survey, were as follows: Wheat flour, white, 5,853,051 barrels; whole wheat and graham flour, 32,065 barrels; barley flour, 17,822 barrels; rye flour, 165,243 barrels; corn flour, 6,128,427 pounds; corn meal, 40,297,627 pounds; buckwheat flour, 20,351,630 pounds; mixed flour, 15,299,679 pounds. These stocks represent the following percentages of the stocks on hand a year ago: Wheat flour white, 121.8 per cent.; whole wheat and graham flour, 31 per cent.; barley flour, 4.8 per cent.; rye flour, 3.1 per cent; corn flour, 14.3 per cent.; corn meal, 29.1 per cent.; buckwheat flour, 326.6 per cent.; mixed flour, 158.5 per cent.

Elevators, Warehouses, and wholesale dealers reported stocks of dry edible beans amounting to 8,291,550 bushels, while wholesale grocers and warehouses reported the following commodities in the quantities indicated: Cleaned rice, 90,013,887 pounds; rolled oats, 37,641,123 pounds; canned salmon, 110,202,642 pounds; canned tomatoes, 199,908,909 pounds; canned corn, 86,649,754 pounds; sugar, 225,345,574 pounds. These stocks represent the following percentages of the corresponding stocks on hand June 1, 1918: Beans, 98.5 per cent.; rice, 93.1 per cent.; rolled oats, 77.7 per cent.; canned salmon, 120.1 per cent.; canned tomatoes, 202.3 per cent.; canned corn, 191.8 per cent.; sugar, 95.4 per cent.

Stocks of condensed and evaporated milk were reported by condensaries, cold storages, warehouses, and wholesale grocers, as follows: Condensed milk, 68,388,528 pounds; evaporated milk, 110,199,055 pounds. The holdings of condensed milk reported for June 1, 1919, represented 103.6 per cent. of the stocks held by the same firms a year earlier, while the holdings of evaporated milk represented 79.7 per cent. of the June 1, 1918, stock.

Participating Features — This participating preferred stock will be entitled to cumulative dividends at the rate of 7% per annum from July 1st, 1919, before any distribution of dividends is made to the common stock, and will participate equally with the common stock share and share alike in dividends up to $10 per share per annum, and in addition is entitled to participate in any further dividends above $10 per share per annum at the rate of ¼ of 1% for each $1.00 paid in excess of the above on the common stock.

Value — Based on appraisals of independent experts the estimated value of the properties (including approximately $4,000,000 cash to be in the treasury of the Company) after deducting the Convertible Bonds outstanding is equal to $200 for each share of this Participating Preferred Stock.

TELLS OF VIOLENCE IN TELEGRAPH STRIKE

Union President Speaks of "Strong Tactics" Used in Other Cities.

CRITICISES BURLESON ANEW

Declares Fight Now Is Against the Government—Will Solicit Strike Funds Here Today.

Sylvester J. Konenkamp, president of the Commercial Telegraphers' Union of America, yesterday addressed a meeting of about 175 strikers in the Rand School of Social Science, at 7 East Fifteenth Street. Representatives of the strikers in Philadelphia, including K. M. Whitten, a vice president of the union, came to the city with the union president.

Konenkamp informed the strikers that he had just received a letter from Postmaster General Burleson and that he planned to read it later to the strike committee at the Hotel Continental. Mr. Konenkamp said last night that the committee had conferred upon the letter, but that he had decided not to make it public.

In his speech at the Rand School he referred to "strong tactics" used by the strikers in various cities where, he pointed out, the strike was going more successfully than in the East. He said that in one instance strikers had threatened a "scab" with the alternative of leaving town or having a rope put around his neck. He related also how an automobile full of strikebreakers had crashed into a telephone pole in Jacksonville, Fla., and said that seven persons were sent to the hospital. Mr. Konenkamp said he didn't know how it came about, "but that our people were fined $10 and costs."

"I realize that for many of you it is hard to realize the full extent of the strike," he said. "There are some points in the East that have shown up poorly, but many other places have done surprisingly well—as Boston, Philadelphia, and, I think, New York, which had done a great deal better than had been expected."

After declaring his belief that the Western strikers would pull the Eastern strikers through to victory, Mr. Konenkamp said the fight now was between unionism and Burleson. He added:

"When John H. Walker of the United Mine Workers and John O'Brien of the Leather Workers, as a committee appointed by the American Federation of Labor, visited the Postmaster General he said that the reason he had recognized the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers was that he had stepped in and averted their strike. He said he could not extend the recognition to the telegraphers because we had gone on strike without 'permission.'

"Mr. Burleson's logic was that you must use force. Our fight now is not so much against the telegraph companies as it is against the Government. It was the Government that refused us, and it is the Government, under Burleson, that must bear the responsibility of the outcome, whatever it may be."

Morris J. Lane, Captain of the pickets, complained that few of the strikers were appearing for picket duty. As one at the meeting put it, "they prefer Coney Island to Konenkamp, apparently." Lane announced that today "at 2 o'clock, if the printing is done," Telegraphers' Week would start. Collectors with boxes will be sent into the subways, hotels, and on the elevated lines seeking funds for the prosecution of the strike.

BANK RESOURCES EXCEED 20 BILLIONS

National System's Totals Are $2,575,000,000 Ahead of Returns of May, 1918.

STATEMENT BY CONTROLLER

Increase of $9,948,000,000 Since 1913 Concurrent with Flotation of $25,000,000,000 of Bonds.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, June 29.—John Skelton Williams, Controller of the Currency, announced today that the returns of the national banks as of May 12, 1919, under the last bank call, as just compiled by the Treasury Department, show resources of $20,825,000,000. These exceeded by $783,000,000 the resources reported on Dec. 31, 1918, which up to that time had been the greatest in the history of the system. These resources also exceeded by $807,000,000 the resources of March 4, 1919, and are $2,575,000,000 ahead of the figures of May 10, 1918.

The bank call showed that there has been practically a $10,000,000,000 increase in national bank resources since 1913. Mr. Williams says that there has been a greater growth in the last six years than in the preceding forty-seven years.

"The official records," said Controller Williams, in a prepared statement given out tonight, "show that the increase in resources since the call of Aug. 9, 1913, six years ago, has been nearly $10,000,000,000, or, to be exact, $9,948,000,000. This huge increase has taken place concurrently with the successful flotation and collection of about $25,000,000,000 of Government bonds and short-term obligations, the majority of which, it appears, were placed through the agency of the national banks.

"With this vast increase in resources and responsibilities our national banks have enjoyed a greater immunity from failure than ever before, the record showing, in the last eighteen months, or since Jan. 1, 1918, only two small national bank failures in the entire country.

"Deposits May 12, 1919, amounted to $15,903,000,000, an increase over May 10, 1918, of $1,518,000,000 and an increase over March 4, 1919, of $604,000,000.

"Of this increase since March 4, 1919, $92,000,000 was in the country banks, $364,000,000 in the Central Reserve city banks, and $148,000,000 in the national banks in the other Reserve cities. The cities showing the largest increase in deposits were New York, $355,000,000; San Francisco, $32,000,000; Boston, $27,000,000; Detroit, $20,000,000; Kansas City, $17,000,000; Portland, Ore., $11,000,000. In all other Reserve cities reporting an increase, the increase since March 4, 1919, in no one city exceeded $10,000,000. The principal increases in country national banks were: New York, $20,000,000; California, $17,000,000; Indiana, $13,000,000; Massachusetts and Pennsylvania, $10,000,000 each.

"Loans and discounts on May 12, 1919, amounted to $9,904,000,000, an increase over March 4, 1919, of $213,000,000, and an increase, compared with May 10, 1918, of $644,000,000. It is noted that this increase in loans over May 10, 1918, compares with increases in deposits for the same period of $1,519,000,000. The proportion of loans to deposits on May 12, 1919, was 62.02 per cent., as compared with 64.37 per cent. on May 10, 1918.

"Bills payable on May 12, 1919, amounted to $1,547,000,000, an increase of $96,000,000 over March 4, 1919, and an increase over May 10, 1918, of $703,000,000, due principally to the increased holdings of Government bonds and certificates. The national bank liabilities for rediscounts on May 12, 1919, amounted to $348,000,000, the lowest reported since November 20, 1917. These figures compare with $369,000,000 rediscounts, March 4, 1919; $502,000,000, December 31, 1918; $629,000,000, November 1, 1918, and $469,000,000 a year ago, May 10, 1918.

"United States bonds, including Liberty bonds and United States certificates of indebtedness held May 12, 1919, amounted to $4,028,000,000, an increase of $346,000,000 over March 4, 1919, and an increase as compared with May 10, 1918, of $1,370,000,000. Of these obligations approximately $700,000,000 were old United States bonds held as a basis for circulation. About $1,000,000,000 of the Government obligations were Liberty bonds, the balances, approximately $2,300,000,000, were short-term certificates of indebtedness.

"Other bonds, securites, &c., held May 12, 1919, amounted to $1,743,000,000, an increase of $42,000,000 over March 4, 1919 and a reduction of $14,000,000 as compared with May 10, 1918.

"Capital, surplus, and profits amounted to $2,360,000,000, an increase over May 10, 1918, of $103,000,000.

"Circulation of national banks May 12, 1919, was $676,000,000, an increase of $3,000,000 over March 4, 1919, and a reduction of $3,000,000, as compared with May 10, 1918.

"The cash on hand and due from Federal Reserve banks May 12, 1919, was $1,926,000,000, being the largest balance ever reported, an increase of $67,000,000 over March 4, 1919, and an increase over May 10, 1918, of $186,000,000."

Postal Tubes Head Sends Heated Letter to Postmaster General.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, June 29.—Postmaster General Burleson is accused of "misstatements of facts and half truths far worse than misstatements of facts," in a letter sent to him by Gilmer Clapp, President of the American Pneumatic Service Company of Boston, taking exception to his attitude toward the use of pneumatic tubes in mail service.

The letter is in reply to one written by Mr. Burleson recently to Representative Buchman, relative to Representative Gallivan of Massachusetts, which drew a lively rejoinder from Mr. Gallivan. In it Mr. Clapp said:

"It is literally true, as you quote, that the late Mr. Moody, about twenty years ago, while a member of Congress, criticised the then existing tube service. It is also true, as you do not state, that the American Pneumatic Service Company at that time was not even in existence.

"Neither do you state that a commission composed of the leading postal experts in the country was appointed to investigate the possibilities of carrying United States mails by underground pneumatic tubes. You better than anyone else, should know that the report of this committee was unanimously in favor of not only of continuing, but of extending the underground pneumatic tube service.

"In the face of this report, and in spite of the fact that every commission of recognized postal experts since that time, excepting only a commission of your own subordinates appointed by you, have indorsed the tubes and recommended their further extension, you now see fit to make the bald statement that all postal experts have always opposed the tubes.

"But one person is known to be opposed to the pneumatic tube service, and that person is you, who yourself admit that you have never investigated the service and state that you rely entirely upon your subordinates for your opinion regarding it.

"To gloat over, as you now do in this letter to a Congressman, the practical wiping out of a property costing more than five million dollars; the suspension of dividends to several thousand stockholders, besides destroying their investment; and the slowing up of the mail service in the five largest cities of the country—all brought about by your own individual action—represents a state of mind which is both incomprehensible and reprehensible."

Portsmouth, the County seat of Norfolk County, Virginia, is located directly opposite Norfolk on one of the finest deep water harbors on the Atlantic Coast. According to Government statistics, the value of all traffic passing through the port of Portsmouth and Norfolk in 1918 was $3,034,636,161, representing 34,464,242 tons.

The city is served by the Atlantic Coast Line; Seaboard Air Line; Southern; and New York, Philadelphia and Norfolk; (Penna. R. R. System); all connected by a Belt Line railroad, situated on which are seventy-five manufactories, the principal of which are paper, cotton and hosiery mills, oil refinery, fertilizer, paving block, creosote and veneer factories, railway shops, lumber mills and its allied trades.

Norfolk County is situated in one of the richest trucking sections of the United States and truck farming has become one of the principal industries, its products being distributed through Portsmouth.

The greater part of the City's bonded indebtedness is represented by water bonds issued for income producing property. The present total tax rate is only $2.68 including a temporary special school tax of 50c to meet increased wages and it is conservatively estimated that assessed value of real property is but 50% of the actual.

These bonds are a direct obligation of the entire city, payable from taxes levied against all of the taxable property. Legal opinion will be furnished upon request.

All statements herein are official, or based on information which we regard as reliable, and, while we do not guarantee them, they are the data upon which we have acted in the purchase of this property.

ADVERTISING IS AN INVESTMENT

Careful Advertisers Preferred

The careful advertiser comes to Federal because he believes that at Federal he can secure the advertising service that is best calculated to advance the prosperity of his business.

The careless advertiser, on the other hand, is often led astray by the glamor of promise and is too likely to be influenced, in the selection of advertising counsel, by considerations other than those of merit and ability.

Federal prefers discriminating advertisers because they are the kind who appreciate the sincerity of Federal service and know that in advertising, more than in any other branch of selling, it pays to

The meaning in United Retail Stores CORPORATION

In May and June, 1912, Dow, Jones & Co. in its financial news bulletins and The Wall Street Journal expounded the principles under the UNITED CIGAR STORES CO.

Retail Stores as Investments

(From The Wall Street Journal and Dow, Jones & Co. Bulletins, May 20, 1912.)

Until recently railroad transportation was the expanding business of the United States, absorbing the major portion of the accumulating investment funds of the country. Now capital is turning steadily to industrial enterprises.

President Whelan, of the United Cigar Stores Co., to which the Supreme Court has just given a clean bill of health by forcing out the American Tobacco Co. and twenty-eight co-defendants from ownership therein, tells his friends that manufacturing and retailing are the only lines left for profitable enterprise.

He has backed his opinion with his fortune and purchased from the defendant litigants all their remaining United Cigar Stores Co. shares at under $200 per share, thus assuring himself practical control of the business he has been all his life developing.

What his profit in the future may be is not of such general interest as is a valuation of the business principles which enable this company to cut the prices of standard goods 15 to 20 per cent., proclaim that a nickel in the dollar is all the retail profits it seeks, and yet maintain the faith that retailing is to be in this country one of the great bases for investments.

United Retail Stores

(From The Wall Street Journal and Dow, Jones & Co. Bulletins, June 26, 1919.)

"Retail business is the biggest business in the world," said George J. Whelan in May, 1912, as he landed from the Lusitania after a four-months trip in England. During this trip the cables were kept warm and his interests in United Cigar Stores were very much increased as the decision of the Supreme Court dissolved its conection with the American Tobacco Co.

In June, 1912, Dow, Jones & Co. and The Wall Street Journal and their allied financial publications expounded the principles underlying the organization of the United Cigar Stores Co. The stock was then selling at under $210 per share. Soon after it sold at $260. Later each stockholder received in reorganization three shares for one.

The quotation of United Cigar Stores made this month of $167 per share means $501 per share for the old stock upon which present stockholders are receiving $27 per share as formerly held. Through peace and war it has maintained and increased its dividends.

The proposal now under consideration is to enlarge the scope of the organization, give two shares for each present share outstanding and still further solidify the investment base under the concern.

To this end, United Retail Stores Corporation has been organized, and George J. Whelan, James B. Duke and their associates have initially paid in $70 per share in cash for the first 50,000 shares of the new company. The capital is to be expanded by the issue of two shares for each of the 270,000 shares of United Cigar Stores stock and possibly later the holders of $4,500,000 United Cigar Stores 7% preferred stock will be glad to exchange for Retail Stores share for share.

The new stock will have no par value. There will also be issued founders' stock to take the place of the present bonus plan in operation in the management of United Cigar Stores.

This plan is novel and is destined to attract wide attention. It is in effect a profit-sharing plan for those who are expected to build up and expand the organization and continue with it. The stock will be sold to such at $5 per share and it will receive the regular dividends paid upon the other shares. But employes can not sell this stock except to the company, which will buy the same in the event of the death of the beneficiary, paying therefore the market price of the regular stock and also for any value shown in such shares above the market price.

This plan gives the beneficiary immediate insurance valuable to his family or his estate. It is in effect his contract and bonus. If he received this stock under contract and paid therefor $5 per share and died the next day, his family or estate would immediately receive for each share $100, if that was the market price for the vendable shares.

His incentive is therefore to upbuild the trade and goodwill of this company and give value to these shares quoted this week at $84 and which are expected to be in the future steadily appreciating premium certificates.

United Cigar Stores will keep its trade-mark and organization and as such will seek to secure more than its present $65,000,000 gross of the $1,200,000,000 tobacco business in this country.

But the interesting feature of the new organization is that the United Cigar Stores becomes only one branch in the general plan of the Retail Stores organization, which proposes unlimited expansion in the general retail business.

United Retail Stores Corporation is organized to hold and develop companies with valuable going trade-marks.

The fundamental principle of the new concern is that it will never buy a business without the men, the organization and value in the same with trade-marked and popular articles.

It will also have the same principles as those underlying the success of the United Cigar Stores. It will not be a promotion to be floated. It is to be directed and managed by the men who have their fortunes and their future in it.

It has been the life ambition of George J. Whelan to expand into a larger retail organization. It is the present ambition of James B. Duke—for whom increment of wealth can hold little attraction—to wrestle with the problem of distribution of goods with reduced cost to the consumer.

Mr. Whelan and his family propose to turn into the new company 65,000 shares of United Cigar Stores stock and take 130,000 shares of the new Retail Stores Corporation, and he believes in so doing he is perpetuating and enlarging his life work and giving continuity to the same upon an investment basis.

Indeed, he has expressed a desire that as United Cigar Stores disappears from Wall Street, so in time may the shares of the Retail Stores Corporation disappear from Wall Street and represent entirely a business investment proposition managed by the workers and largely owned by them.

The United Cigar Stores never had a director that was not a worker in the concern and Whelan and Duke will be the leading workers in the new Retail Stores Corporation.

The United States offers no sport for rich men like that of business development and the expanding of industrial and merchandising organizations building for the workers, the consumers and the investors.

The real estate department, with its success in selection of locations, was fundamental in the success of United Cigars. Business location, trade-marks and brain organizations are expected to continue its success in the new United Retail Stores Corporation.

It is just such careful financial news presentations and studies in values—and the business principles that make values—that have advanced the Dow, Jones & Co. financial bulletins and The Wall Street Journal to their present commanding position as the leading collectors and distributers of financial news in the United States.

While the Dow, Jones Electric Page Printer flashes the news by which financial centres all over the country are quickly informed on passing events, sound finance is not built from flashes, but from steady reading of the Dow, Jones & Co. bulletins, which go to make up The Wall Street Journal and constitute the investors' guide in finance.

The Dow, Jones & Co. bulletins and The Wall Street Journal should be daily read and studied by every man who hopes to be an intelligent investor.

These give all the facts and factors upon which fortunes are founded, and where these facts and factors are ignored, overlooked, forgotten, or not studied, fortunes are lost.

FINANCIAL NOTICES.

To the Holders of "New York Shares" and "American Shares" representing ROYAL DUTCH COMPANY Ordinary Stock:
June 25, 1919.
We are advised by cable that, subject to the approval by the shareholders of the Royal Dutch Company, at a general meeting to be held in Holland on June 30, 1919, the holders of outstanding Ordinary Shares are offered the right to subscribe at par, plus stamp tax in Holland, to one share of new Ordinary Stock for each four shares of stock held. The new stock to be subscribed for will be entitled to the dividends for the fiscal year of 1919 (payable in 1920). We are further advised that the final dividend for 1918 has been fixed at 25% and that the date for the payment of this dividend (on the old stock) will be the same as the date for the payment of the subscription in Holland on the new stock offered. This date will probably be July 16, 1919.
In view of the fact that subscription applications must be filed in Holland between June 16 and July 4, 1919, and in order to protect the rights of holders of "New York Shares" and of "American Shares" we have taken steps to file application to subscribe to the new stock to which all of the stock deposited with us under the Agreements of September 10, 1918, (covering "New York Shares,") and December 22, 1916, (covering "American Shares,") is entitled.
Manner of Exercising Subscription Privilege by Holders of "New York Shares."
Transferable warrants will be issued to the holders of "New York Shares" of record July 7, 1919, as soon thereafter as practicable, entitling them to subscribe to new "New York Shares" at the rate of one "New York Share" for each four "New York Shares" held on the record date.
Subscription payments must be made at the office of the undersigned at 37 Wall Street, New York City, on or before the close of business July 22, 1919.
The amount per share to be paid will be fixed at the time of issuing the subscription warrants. This payment will include the subscription price plus taxes, expenses and fee for depositing new ordinary stock subscribed for under the "New York" Agreement, and will probably be between $3.75 and $4.00 on each old "New York Share." Any excess of this payment not required for the above purposes will subsequently be refunded to the subscribers. It is impossible to fix the exact amount of the payment at this time, as this depends upon the rate of exchange for guilders and also upon the exact amount of the expenses.
Manner of Exercising Subscription Privilege by Holders of "American Shares."
Owing to the fact that additional "American Shares" can only be issued against the actual deposit with the Depositary in New York City of Royal Dutch Company Ordinary Sub-shares, "American" Shareholders wishing to avail themselves of the subscription privilege and to receive their new stock in New York in the form of "New York Shares" may do so by exchanging their present holdings of "American Shares" for "New York Shares" without cost to them, at the office of The Equitable Trust Company of New York City, ON OR BEFORE JULY 7, 1919.
Otherwise transferable warrants will be issued to the holders of "American Shares" of record July 7, 1919, as soon thereafter as practicable, entitling them to subscribe to new Royal Dutch Ordinary Sub-shares at the rate of one such Royal Dutch Sub-share for each twelve "American Shares" held on the record date.
We recommend, however, that holders exchange their "American Shares" for "New York Shares," so that there may ultimately be only "New York Shares" outstanding. The "New York Shares" represent exactly the same par value of Royal Dutch Ordinary Stock as the American Shares. The "New York" Agreement is more elastic in that it makes possible the issue of "New York Shares" against the deposit of Dutch Stock in Holland, thus eliminating the necessity of shipping the Dutch stock to New York City.
Subscription payments must be made at the office of the undersigned at 37 Wall Street, New York City, on or before the close of business July 22, 1919. Holders of "American Shares" upon making payment of their subscriptions will receive receipts entitling them to Orders on Holland calling for delivery of Royal Dutch Sub-shares in Holland upon surrender of such Orders.
The amount per share to be paid will be fixed at the time of issuing the subscription warrants. This payment will include the subscription price plus taxes and expenses and will be approximately the same as the amount to be paid by the subscribers to "New York Shares," but will not include any charge which may subsequently be made by our correspondents for delivery of the Sub-shares upon the surrender of the Order in Holland.
Final Dividend for 1918.
This dividend will be paid to holders of "New York Shares" and of "American Shares" of record July 7, 1919, as soon after July 22, 1919, as practicable. The amount of this dividend will be announced after its payment in Holland. Dividend checks will be mailed only when income tax ownership certificates properly filled out have been filed with the undersigned.
Special Attention Is Called to the Following:
1. The foregoing is dependent upon favorable action at the general meeting to be held in Holland on June 30, 1919.
2. No "New York Shares" in exchange for new Ordinary Dutch Stock will be issued and no Orders on Holland for Sub-shares will be issued until we are advised that the Royal Assent has been obtained to the alteration of the statutes in connection with the proposed stock increase, as the Royal Dutch Company reserves the right to return subscription payments in case of failure to obtain Royal Assent. In this event, upon surrender of subscription warrants, we will return to the subscriber the amount paid less the proportionate amount of our expenses actually incurred in this matter.
3. Fractional scrip certificates will be issued for all fractional interests.

In other words, here is an opening that many a man has sought for in vain for years. HYLAN WOULD HELP WOMEN IN COURT

Suggests a Public Defender to Break Up Conspiracies of Lawyers and Policemen.

POLICEWOMAN VICE SQUADS

Mayor Tells How Magistrates Are Deceived by Arresting Officers and "Despicable" Attorneys.

In a letter to Rodman Wanamaker, Chairman of the Mayor's Committee on Public Welfare, made public yesterday, Mayor Hylan suggested that the committee arrange for a lawyer, preferably a woman, to be present at each session of the Woman's Court to look after the interests of women who have been arrested and who have not the means to employ legal help. The Mayor in the letter takes occasion to praise the work of the Police Department in clearing the streets of objectionable characters and says that much of the work in the future against undesirable female characters will be done by policewomen. The letter follows:

"Hon. Rodman Wanamaker, Chairman, Committee on Public Welfare, City of New York:

"My Dear Mr. Chairman—A report I have received from Commissioner Enright, which is now before me, showing the excellent work done by the Police Department during the war, with the co-operation of the military police, looking for the safeguarding of the hundreds of thousands of soldiers and sailors who pass through the city, gives me the idea of suggesting to you that your committee could be very helpful in a new field of public service.

"Since January, 1918, 1,309 arrests have been made of women. During that same period forty places masquerading as hotels, all of which had been operated in this city for many years, were suppressed by the police.

"Police officers charged with the performance of this very disagreeable duty have been repeatedly cautioned to exercise judgment in making arrests and to avoid any course of conduct that might work an injustice to any one in these cases. The police have been instructed to warn those whose action and appearance were not in the best interests of the welfare of the community to keep away from the locality where arrests of this kind had been made and where persons of this character have been known to frequent.

"The Commissioner further states that he has assigned a number of policewomen on these cases, and if this proves successful this kind of work will be done in the future by policewomen. It has been intimated that police officers were working with despicable lawyers who make a specialty of preying upon women and demanding excessive fees for defending them. The District Attorney has very properly suggested the advisability of appointing a woman as an assistant prosecuting officer, which is highly commendable.

"Could not your committee engage a good, reputable lawyer, preferably a woman, who would be assigned to the Women's Court to look after the legal rights of women who have been arrested? This would aid justice, and not obstruct it. It would work toward the elimination of the shyster lawyer who devotes himself wholly to preying upon women who are arrested and brought into court.

"Women brought to court should be informed that there is some one at the court with whom they can advise and to whom they might state their case, who would appear for them without charging a fee. This would drive these lawyers from this kind of practice and end any possible connection between such lawyers and the police.

"It is very likely that police officers assigned to this special kind of work become overzealous in the performance of their work. A woman under arrest surely needs help in a case like that. Then again it sometimes happens that unscrupulous policemen will make an arrangement with an unscrupulous lawyer, whereby after the arrest the lawyer gets the case and all the money that he can squeeze out of the woman. The case goes to trial. The officer gives his testimony. The Magistrate assumes it to be true. The lawyer, who ought to be protecting the woman, never questions the veracity of his friend the policeman. In most cases the woman is found guilty. Sentence is suspended and the defendant placed on probation. This procedure protects the officer, stops any criticism of the Magistrate, and pleases and profits the lawyer in the case. The whole thing is a farce. If the lawyer was was not under obligation to the policeman he would not hesitate to cross-examine at the trial. The Magistrate would then pay more attention, and the laxity which terminates the procedure in many of these cases and in minor criminal courts would be thus eliminated.

"I am happy to say that the police are, for the most part, clean, decent men, but with a force of 10,000 men some bad men will get in and discredit the others, just as they do in other walks of life. When we see a condition that invites corrupt practices, it is our duty, when we can, to correct it. I believe that if you can get the right kind of a lawyer working under your direction it will do a lot of good. Of course, you would have to get a man or woman who will give his or her whole time to this welfare work. Sincerely yours,

"JOHN F. HYLAN."

TALKS OF ICE FAMINE TO COME IN AUGUST

Head of Mayor's Committee Prepares Conservation Warning for All Consumers.

MAY SEIZE ICE PLANTS

Hudson River Reserve Supply Exhausted—Hints to Householders on Saving Ice.

Predicting that New York will be short about 12,000 tons of ice a day by the middle of August, City Chamberlain Philip Berolzheimer, Chairman of the Mayor's Ice Committee, has taken up the matter of conservation, and yesterday issued a warning to the public, which will be distributed by the police and other city employes.

Mr. Berolzheimer pointed out that not a pound of ice was harvested for this market on the Hudson last Winter, and that the Hudson ice house reserve from previous seasons was only 600,000 tons the beginning of this season.

"A canvass of the capacity of the artificial ice plants and the credit to this market of 100,000 tons of Maine ice owned by New York dealers has failed to show any chance of relief that will be appreciable," Mr. Berolzheimer said.

The Chamberlain's researches were made with the view of getting ice for free distribution to the poor. The committee has made progress and, with the assistance of the Salvation Army and other charitable agencies, twenty-five tons a day, or more, will be devoted to relieving suffering.

"The need for conserving ice," said Chamberlain Berolzheimer, "is a matter of such vital importance that it is seriously considered as coming within the vast police powers of the Board of Health. No less drastic measures than commandeering the artificial ice plants and putting an embargo on the Hudson River reserve stock have already been discussed.

"The question has been raised as to whether it would be worth while to stop the movement of what little Hudson River ice is now coming to the city so that it would be available later for a time of greater need. There is no difficulty about such an embargo, should it be decided upon as advisable. The ice docks are under the control of the Department of Docks."

It was announced that a close watch was being kept on hotels, restaurants, ice-cream manufacturers, saloons, drug stores, etc., and unless consumption is reduced at least 30 to 50 per cent. without further notice they must take the consequences.

The circular that the police and other employes of the city will distribute reads as follows:

WARNING!

From present indications the City of New York will face an ICE FAMINE this Summer. At best, the city will be short some 12,000 tons of ice a day, beginning about the middle of August, on account of the failure of the Hudson River ice crop last Winter, when no ice at all was harvested.

The public is, therefore, warned to restrict the purchase and consumption of ice in every way possible. If the consumption is not reduced in this way some very drastic measures will have to be taken to insure that the supply will last longer, and that all whose needs are greatest will get some of the ice.

PHILIP BEROLZHEIMER,
Chamberlain, and Chairman Mayor Hylan Ice Committee.

Chamberlain Berolzheimer's Committee will also support and further the efforts of Deputy Market Commissioner O'Malley to induce the average user of ice to adopt ice saving methods. The "tips" on this subject in convenient form to be tacked up on the ice box are to be distributed with the warning. They are as follows:

DO NOT LEAVE ICE ON DUMB WAITER TO MELT.—Put it in ice box immediately when delivered on dumb waiter.

OPEN ICE BOX ONLY WHEN YOU HAVE TO.—Cold air escapes quickly and the inrushing warm air melts ice rapidly.

WRAP ICE ON TOP AND SIDES IN NEWSPAPER.—It will melt more slowly.

COOL TEA AND DRINKS OF ALL KINDS BY PUTTING BOTTLES IN ICE BOX.—Keep them on the bottom, but not against the ice.

DON'T PUT CHOPPED ICE IN DRINKS.—This wastes ice and keeps the ice box open too much.

PROPOSE NATIONAL BUDGET.

New Committee Says President Should Plan Public Expenditures.

John T. Pratt, Chairman of the National Budget Committee, of which Paul M. Warburg, Benjamin Strong, Joseph H. Cotton, and Henry L. Stimson are members, announced yesterday the opening of a campaign for the adoption of a national budget system by Congress.

"The need for a budgetary system in the United States has been apparent for years," said Mr. Pratt, "and Old World financiers have looked in amazement upon the slip-shod methods with which we have been paying bills and estimating costs. Debts of approximately $25,000,000,000 have appreciably lessened the country's total wealth of $250,000,000,000. The time has come for retrenchment.

"A permanent, nonpartisan organization of banking and business experts in the office of the President would have the advantage of departmental advice and original investigation in the preparation of requisitions. It would be the duty of this bureau to consider departmental money needs as a whole, and to balance them with the nation's total income. The budget, once prepared, should be turned over to a single committee of the House instead of being submitted to a dozen or more committees for consideration. House and Senate rulings should insure that the President's budget be made the sole object of consideration. No recommendations as to how the nation's revenue needs are to be met should be submitted to Congress by any other officer."

Mr. Pratt said that the committee was supported entirely by public contribution and was not affiliated with any party or private enterprise. He said that nine State Chairmen had been appointed and working organizations perfected in California, Georgia, Delaware, Illinois, Louisiana, South Carolina, New Jersey, Vermont, and Missouri.

PLANNED ADVERTISING assists in the birth of KRYSTALAK

THREE years ago The Dry Milk Company sold its product in bulk to bakers, confectioners and ice cream makers.

Today, Planned Advertising has added housewives to the three former users. The demand exceeds the supply.

Housewives ask for "Krystalak". It comes in attractive, airtight, sanitary packages that protect the contents until they are entirely used.

We were consulted by The Dry Milk Company when Krystalak was but an idea. Working closely with the manufacturer, we designed the trademark and package. A try-out advertising campaign in cities of moderate size produced results that justified entering New York City with an appropriation adequate to sell the surplus product. Now The Dry Milk Company's problem is to make the output keep pace with the demand.

We hope that some food product manufacturer in a position similar to that of The Dry Milk Company three years ago will read this. If his product is worthy, if the potential market warrants the effort and expenditure, we will work with him to change the complexion of his demand so as to sell his output under a trade name, lifting it beyond the attacks of ordinary competition.

Appointments for interviews may be arranged by letter or telephone in any of our offices or in that of the manufacturer.

FEARS LOSS IN PRODUCTION.

Industrial Board Not Enthusiastic Over 50-Hour Week.

BOSTON, June 29.—A report, issued by the National Industrial Conference Board today, said that an investigation of the metal manufacturing industries indicated it was possible for "a considerable proportion of establishments to maintain production on a schedule of fifty hours a week," but that such a schedule "could not be universally adopted by these industries without some loss of production."

Of the forty-eight-hour week the report said: "If both management and workers would actively co-operate," such a week "might prove practicable in a larger number of establishments than is now the case. But unless such co-operation is secured there can be little question that the general adoption of a forty-eight-hour week in the metal trades would involve a serious economic loss to the nation."

"Of sixty-six establishments which reduced to a fifty-hour week," the report said, "four reported production as increased, twenty-eight as maintained, and thirty-four as reduced."

War Taxes Will Continue

WITH government debts and obligations remaining to be paid, it is highly advisable for every business organization to realize that government taxes will continue to be levied. Every business, therefore, should be so organized as to take care of these taxes.

Above all, it is most essential that proper accounting of taxable profits continue to be an important part of every business. If this is done throughout the year, considerable confusion will be avoided at the end of the year.
